PREFACE.

The Committee appointed at the late Sesqui-centennial Gathering of the Jacksons to publish the proceedings of that occasion, it might appear, had their prescribed duties sufficiently defined at that time; and restricted to that particular undertaking, the work assigned them might have been completed a few weeks after the meeting was held; but some efforts having previously been made towards the compilation of a family record of the earlier branches, on consultation on the subject and through the urgent solicitation of many of the friends interested, it was thought a genealogy of the family brought down to the latest period, might add much to the value of the work, although necessarily attended with protracted delay in bringing it to the requisite degree of completeness. With the view of producing a work of this character that might meet with general acceptance and become worthy of preservation, as, at least, a "brief memorial," more especially of those who have passed away, one of the committee undertook the task of searching up family records; and, in response to a circular issued requesting the requisite data for such a compilation, through patient enquiry and research a record of more than three thousand of the descendants of Isaac and Ann Jackson is the result; and although many of the branches are minute in particulars, yet a longer period allowed for further investigation might bring to light, associated with many interesting facts, some hundreds more, regarding whom it is to be regretted no data of family history have been obtained.

The labor of compiling a genealogy that is carried to the ninth generation can only be comprehended fully by those who have made it a special study. The intricate paths through which the genealogist is led to acquire the sought-for knowledge—the uncertain data often presented requiring from various sources confirmatory evidence to establish fact—the vague, immethodical way in which some, through succeeding generations, have preserved their records—failure in numerous instances to supply answers to definite enquiries—and added to this the frequent uncertainty of tradition—are all difficulties to be grappled with in the way of research.

The present task has been carried on, not as an onerous undertaking, but as a "labor of love," with no expectation of compensating advantage or of adequate reward, other than that arising from the satisfaction of bringing into a collected form for preservation, such details of our family history as are deemed of general interest, and which otherwise might in the lapse of a few years pass into oblivion. To facilitate enquiry, the compiler has had the kind assistance of others, to some of whom there is a special indebtedness, and their valuable services are hereby acknowledged. To Gilbert Cope, of West Chester, whose voluminous records of the early settlers of Chester County, as well as many of their descendants, have been freely consulted, and have furnished a large amount of material that otherwise, in all probability, would not have been accessible; also through his correspondence with Samuel Bewley,* a Friend in Dublin, Ireland, for a transcript of the minutes from the old records of Mountmellick Meeting, referring to all the Jacksons whose names were therein recorded. To Thomas Jackson, Architect, of Belfast, for a neatly prepared chart giving a genealogy of the Jacksons from their first arrival in Ireland, but chiefly limited to the descendants of Thomas, the oldest son of Isaac and Ann Jackson; also to his brother, Samuel Pim Jackson, of Bristol, England, for additional information of value. To James M. Phillips, of Avondale, Chester County, who has with great care and labor worked out the record of the descendants of James, son of William and Katharine Jackson, nearly complete in detail as regards dates of births, marriages and deaths. The record of the Kirk family has also supplied important items for some branches and thereby materially lessened the labor of research. To John J. Parker, of West Chester, for many of the items given in the appendix relating to the descendants of Samuel Jackson, (Hatter) of Reading, including branches related thereto, which through his generous aid have been carefully gathered from reliable records.

It may appear to some that extraneous matter, or such as might be irrelevant to the subject of special enquiry, has been introduced, or that extended notices of individuals have place without regard to the prescribed limits of a genealogical record, but it was thought such items might invest the work with an interest that could not be supplied by the mere record of names and dates; and it is only to be regretted that more of such notices or "brief memorials" of the lives of many others of the same lineage, perhaps equally worthy of record, could not have been obtained. It has been the intention of the compiler to present throughout an impartial account—to enter all names and dates with accuracy, though errors, it is possible, in some instances, may have occurred, arising chiefly from some family records not prepared with sufficient care, and to which alone he has had access. It has been thought advisable to append to our family record some other branches of the same name not yet traceable to a common ancestry, but which may be determined by future investigations.

*It is announced in "The British Friend" of 11mo. 1. 1877, that Samuel Bewley died 10mo. 7, 1877, at his residence, Sandford Grove, Dublin, after a short illness of five days, aged nearly 72 years. Its obituary states that he was "widely known and esteemed for his sterling worth and Christian graces," * * not only by his family and friends in his own land, but by many also in England and America. The removal of such a man is indeed a deep loss. His judgment was so sound and excellent that it commended itself to all, and his counsel was so wise, and at the same time so full of love, that it was highly valued by those who came under its influence. He was ever ready to give his time and attention to any who sought his advice, and numbers can bear testimony to the kind manner with which he entered into the subjects brought before him. While much engaged in the service of our Religious Society, the interests of which were very dear to his heart, he found time also to attend to other objects of a more public character, and his upright consistent walk caused him to be highly esteemed and respected by his fellow citizens."

Photographic views taken at the time of the "Gathering" have been heliographed for the work, as likewise a pen-and-ink sketch of the old mansion at Bal-limore, said to have been the residence of our early ancestor, Isaac Jackson, prior to his emigration to America. The old building had been taken down a short time before the sketch was made, but the artist had retained, from actual knowledge of the place, a vivid recollection of the architectural work, and others testifying to the correctness of his sketch, it may be regarded as a good representation of the building, somewhat remodeled in later years, yet some portions retaining the unique style of the olden time. The views, however, reproduced in the heliotype, have not, as rarely can they have, the clearness and finish which are presented in photographic representation.

In reviewing the record, now completed as far as material at hand for our genealogy is supplied, this thought is presented :

How many of these, active in their day of usefulness, are now numbered with the generations long since departed ! Examples among them of uprightness, virtue and integrity, worthy of imitation, may we, their surviving descendants, learn wisdom therefrom and gather the golden grains they may have strewn along the way ! Be our watchword "Onward for the right"—that the record of our lives testify in the future to an unflinching perseverance in well-doing unto the end—for that end, as regards our probation here, must assuredly come; and as assuredly, when another Sesqui-centennial shall have completed its cycle, the pathetic language of the gifted Montgomery must have become respecting each of us a forcible truth :

"Once in the flight of ages past,
There lived a man ! and who was he ?
Stranger, howe'er thy lot be cast,
That man resembled thee.
The clouds and sunbeams o'er his eye
That once their shades and glory threw,
Have left in yonder silent sky
No vestige where they flew."

The Committee having carefully reviewed the "Proceedings of the Gathering," authorized the publication of the same in connection with the family genealogy, the general arrangement of which it is thought will be found free from ambiguity, and it is hoped be satisfactory to all, having a full Index—a desideratum to be appreciated—that will remove all difficulty in tracing any branch through its ancestral line. The Record, though compiled with care, may contain some errors which should be duly noted; and as a copy, for future reference, will be placed in the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, for insertion therein all corrections should be forwarded to the compiler.

INTRODUCTORY.

In endeavoring to trace our ancestral line to an earlier period than the middle of the seventeenth century, after long and assiduous research no satisfactory result has been attained, although the occurrence of the Jackson name antedates the period of the Norman Conquest. In the sixteenth century the Jacksons were numerous in various parts of England, many occupying prominent positions both in church and state; and some, not a few in number, during that age as well as in later times, for the maintenance of principles consonant with their convictions of justice and right, passed through the fiery ordeal of religious persecution.* The Parish records of Lancashire and contiguous counties, as far as consulted, afford no information relative to those who emigrated to Ireland or to America, with whom our forefathers might have claimed a common lineage.

The following letter, bearing upon this subject, has a significance and interest that commend it for insertion here as an appropriate introductory to the proceedings which follow:

WEST CHESTER, NOVEMBER 29, 1877.

TO HALLIDAY JACKSON:

Esteemed Friend:—During a visit which my eldest son, Charlton T. Lewis, and I made to Great Britain in the summer of 1876, we spent part of a day in June at Eccleston, in the ancient parish of St. Michael's, in Lancashire, whence Anthony Jackson migrated in 1649. Our object was, to ascertain whether information could be obtained from any source, of the ancestors of Richard and Anthony Jackson. We hoped to find the dates of their births, and the names of their parents, in the parish register, and to get hold of some clue that would conduct our inquiries to generations more remote. We called on the Rev. William Bateson, the rector of the parish, and learned from him that the old parish register was not in his possession; and that there was no register, so far as he was aware, sufficiently old for our purpose. He knew of no records, then existing, of an earlier date than about the beginning of last century. There was indeed, he said, a number of persons then living in Ecclestone, and in the immediate neighborhood, of the name of Jackson, but he did not suppose that any of them could furnish authentic information of their progenitors who had lived two hundred years ago. Although we were strangers to the Rector, and were without letters of introduction, he treated us with great civility, and seemed to enter into the spirit of our inquiries, and to be disposed to aid us to any reasonable extent in his power. He even promised us that if, in his intercourse with his parishioners, he should receive information of any value to us, he would not fail to furnish us with it.

Since our return home my son has had correspondence with Mr. Bateson, who has been so kind as to have the old parish register looked up and carefully searched; but, as was supposed, the record shows nothing to our purpose. Its earliest entry is in 1661, twelve years after Richard and Anthony Jackson left Lancashire. By a transcript furnished by the church officer having charge of the register, which transcript I have now in my possession, it appears that in the fifty years that followed 1661, there were entries of seventeen marriages, thirty-five baptisms and twenty-seven burials of persons of the name of Jackson; but the record, of course, fails to show any connection between the Jacksons that emigrated twelve years before the date of the first entry, and the Jacksons that remained; and it is not to be expected that further inquiry in the same direction will be attended with a more satisfactory result.

It is something to have found evidence confirming to some extent the truthfulness of existing records, and to have ascertained that the family name is not yet extinct in the seats of our ancestors,—but this is far short of what we hoped and even expected.

Having failed to find, at Great Ecclestone, what we wanted, we visited the next day another town in the same shire, bearing the name of Ecclestone, some twenty-five or thirty miles distant from the former, and there obtained access to the register of the parish. It appeared to have been regularly kept from about the year 1600, except that there was a hiatus of several years between 1621 and 1628, but there was not in it a note of the birth, baptism, or death of a single person of the name of Jackson; nor was the name to be seen, inscribed on any monument or tomb stone in the old church yard of a parish church where for many generations “the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.”

At Bristol, a few days later, we called on Samuel Pim Jackson, Esq., a merchant of that city, a gentleman of intelligence and a highly respectable member of the Society of Friends. He belongs to the Irish branch of the family, and it was supposed that he might have some information about our progenitors, which we did not possess; but we ascertained that what he knew was derived from the same sources as that we already had, and was not more minute or of an earlier date.

Our next inquiry was at the Friends' Institute, Bishopsgate St., London; but no records are found there but such as relate to members of the Society of Friends, in England and Wales, and there was no regular organization of the Society in England till after the emigration of Richard and Anthony Jackson to Ireland.

Any further prosecution of our inquiries seemed to be useless. We might, indeed, have seen some of the Jacksons still residing in and about Old Eccleston, and have asked of them what they knew of their ancestors, but from what we heard of them we were not led to suppose that we should be rewarded for our pains. It is barely possible that a private genealogical record, compiled by some one more than commonly curious in family history, and connecting the English line with the emigrants to Ireland, may yet turn up; but such an occurrence is by no means probable. Such curious compilers are as rare in England as in America, where people are generally too much concerned for the present and the future to trouble themselves about the long past; and I apprehend that we shall have to be content with the scanty information we now have of our English ancestors, who lived prior to the middle of the seventeenth century.

Very sincerely, your friend,

JOSEPH J. LEWIS.

THE SESQUI-CENTENNIAL GATHERING AND ITS PROCEEDINGS.

On the Eleventh of Ninth month, (O. S.) 1725, Isaac Jackson, of Ireland, landed at New Castle, Del., and forthwith proceeded to Londongrove, Chester County, Pa., and located on the spot now known as Harmony Grove. To commemorate this event, the present occupants of the ancestral homestead issued the following card, which, through unremitting exertion on their part, was widely distributed among the descendants of Isaac Jackson, as far as information of their whereabouts could be obtained, many being residents of distant portions of our country:

"You are cordially invited to attend a pic-nic at Harmony Grove, Chester Co., Pa., on the 25th of Eighth month, 1875. This occasion is a sesqui-centennial gathering at the Old Homestead, in commemoration of the landing in this country, and settlement at this place, of our common ancestor, Isaac Jackson, in 1725.

EVERARD AND MARY (JACKSON) CONARD."

In response to the above invitation, a large company of descendants of Isaac Jackson, and those allied to the family by marriage, assembled on the designated day, at the place whereon their ancestor had first made his home in this new country, and which four generations of his descendants have successively occupied. The old homestead stands on the northern side of a fertile valley, about half a mile wide, bounded by gently swelling hills of moderate elevation. A small stream flowing a few rods distant, in front of the mansion, joins a branch of White Clay Creek, which, a short distance eastward, enters the valley through a gap in the northern hill, and, following its course, emerges some two miles below, on its way to mingle its waters ultimately with the Delaware. The Philadelphia and Baltimore Central R. R. traverses the entire length of this valley, and one connecting the Pennsylvania Central road with Delaware City, crosses the former road at the eastern outlet. The valley, which within the memory of those who have scarcely passed middle life, slumbered in quiet seclusion, is thus brought into communication with the busy world beyond its encompassing hills.

The mansion of Harmony Grove is an old-fashioned and unpretending but comfortable structure, the western third, of stone, having been built in 1775; the remainder, of brick, a part of which occupies the site of the primitive cabin of the first settler, at a later period. To the west and north of the house, a space of an acre and a half, extending back to the foot of the more abrupt ascent of the hill, was planted by John Jackson, a grandson of Isaac, in the end of the last and the early years of the present century, as a Botanical garden, wherein he collected numerous rare trees and shrubs from our own and foreign countries, as well as smaller plants.* A very small portion of the ground is now devoted to the culture of flowers, but many noble trees still attest his care and skill. Near the northwestern corner of this garden rises "The Legendary Spring." The source was covered and the waters were conveyed under ground to supply a quaint spring house, flowing through which they were collected in a square pond, which, with its diminutive outlet, furnished localities suited to the culture of aquatic plants. The other half of this building, adjoining the dairy, was a green-house, while a room above was devoted to the drying and storing of seeds. William Jackson, the youngest son of John, and the inheritor of his botanical and horticultural tastes, planted the hill rising on the north of the garden, with evergreens and deciduous trees, which now form a flourishing grove.

Such is the place to which the members of the widely scattered Jackson clan gathered on this occasion. Two days of cloud and frequent rain immediately preceding, had caused many anxious forebodings, but the morning of the appointed day proved fair, while a cooling breeze tempered deliciously the else too ardent heat. The abundant rains of the first part of the month, had maintained in vegetation the freshness of early summer, and nature appeared in her fairest array. By the trains of the Baltimore Central Railroad, which, by special arrangement, stopped on this day a few rods from the mansion, and by private conveyances, came hundreds, eager to meet yet unknown kinsfolk, or to renew acquaintance with early associates, from whom the stream of life had drifted them apart; and before 11 o'clock, the number present probably exceeded a thousand, their ages varying from the patriarch of eighty-four years, to the infant of three months. For all, the hospitable door stood open, and over the gate of entrance from the road in front, appeared in letters of green on a white ground the motto: "HARMONY GROVE—WELCOME." Passing through, the inner side showed the following lines:

* The beautifully-adorned grounds at once indicate to the beholder the careful handiwork of the early Jackson settlers, and the evidences of an early botanical taste in John Jackson, whose favorite pursuit was the cultivation of flowers, and whose love therefor, as for other useful sciences, found a written expression in his own words to his friend and collaborator, Humphrey Marshall, thus:—"I hope the public peace will add fresh life and vigor to every useful science that may tend to adorn and enrich our country, the propagation of plants being one, and much my delight. I take every help that I receive this way as a kindness."—See letter to H. M., dated Third month 30th, 1789, in Memoirs of Bartram and Marshall, by Wm. Darlington, M. D.

"What though it may be that our honored forebears
 Made their mark on the times which with them passed away;
 Our aims and our deeds may be noble as theirs,
 And we make an impress as worthy as they."

Near the eastern end of the garden, about five rods north of the house, seats for a meeting had been arranged in the shade of the grand old trees, and a stand erected for speakers and appropriately decorated. At the back, in large letters, formed of evergreens on a white ground, appeared the words: "IN HONOR OF OUR ANCESTORS." Above this hung a framed drawing, representing on a shield the devices which tradition reports as having been those of the coat of arms of some remote progenitor of the clan, "two greyhounds and a dolphin," typifying "swiftness by land and sea." There was no pretense, of course, of a representation of the actual heraldic arms, and, probably, the only importance attached to the existence of such, by any of the existing descendants, is its apparent indication that the faithful performance of duty and steadfast adherence to their views of right, which, in later days, marked the martyrs and the persecuted Quakers of the family, were manifested in ruder times, in warlike pursuits. Below this picture was a framed photograph of William Jackson, the father of our hostess, and former possessor of Harmony Grove; appended to which were these impromptu lines, written that morning by Charles C. Burleigh:

"Of judgment sound, kind heart and soul serene,
 Clear head and active hand and modest mien;
 Faithful and true and prompt at Duty's call,
 A fearless champion of the rights of all.
 His pole-star Truth, his guide a conscience pure,
 His work well done, and his requital sure."

Above this again was suspended a beautiful wreath of lichens, dried flowers and autumn leaves, within which, neatly framed in ivy leaves, was this printed motto :

“He who blesses most is blest,
And God and man shall own his worth
Who toils to leave as his bequest,
An added beauty to the earth.”

The platform was provided with seats, and a table for the secretaries, and was beautifully decorated with large vases, dishes, and two handsome designs of cut flowers. On the trees forming the two front corners, hung the dates “1725-1875;” the former in figures of antique style, formed of lichens on a white ground, and framed with lichens, ‘immortelles’ and pine cones; the latter in modern characters of fresh evergreen and edged with fresh rosebuds.

In various places against the trunks of trees in the grove, were suspended printed mottoes in rustic frames, as follows :

“Lo, from all the country side,
Come neighbors, kith and kin ;
From city, hamlet, farm-house old,
The welcome guests come in.”

“If we gather each his share,
We’ll find two flowers for every care ;
And thus dress up life’s tangled bowers,
And make it all a world of flowers.”

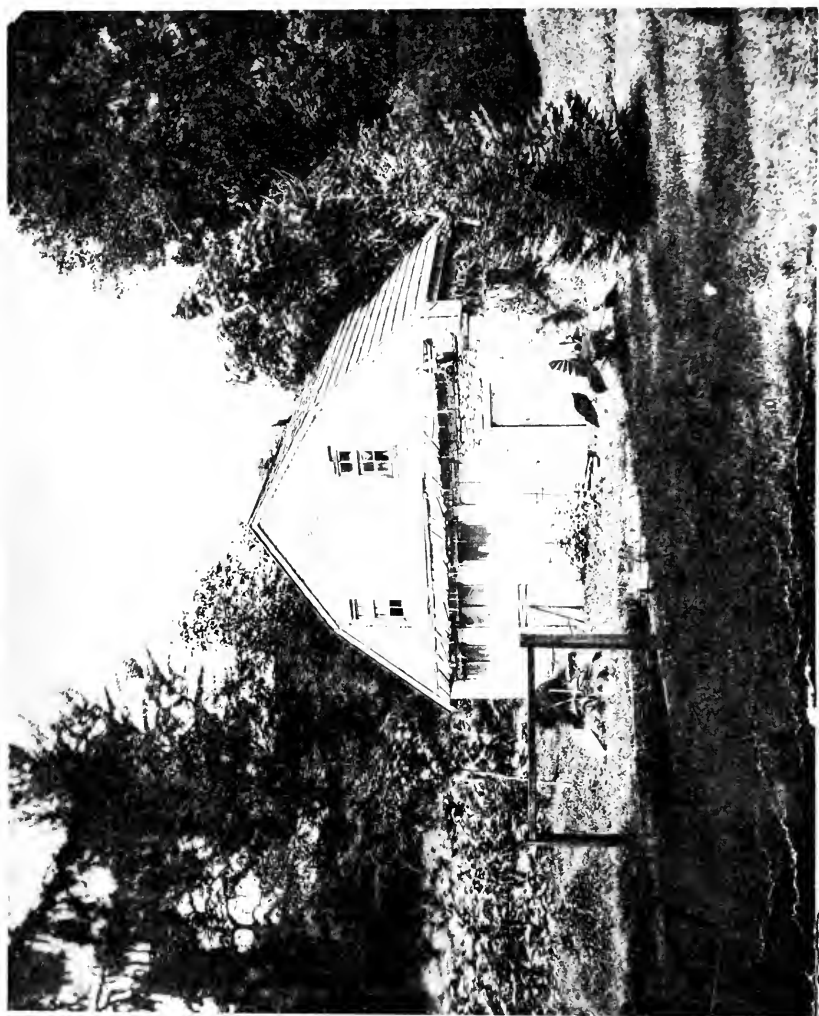

“Here’s pleasure without regretting,
And good without abuse,
The holiday and the bridal
Of beauty and of use.”—WHITTIER.

“The sweet remembrance of the just,
Shall flourish when he sleeps in dust.”

“Thank God for every hour and day,
Of all the past of earthly flowers,
Since one quick thought can make them ours,
And scatter time and space away.”

“The green earth sends her incense up
From many a mountain shrine,
From folded leaf and dewy cup
She pours her sacred wine.”—WHITTIER.

On the western end of the mansion, (built in 1775,) hung two plain frames, containing the words: "The Bridal Home of John and Mary Jackson," and under this these lines:

"A hundred years of time and tide,
Unto these walls have come,
A hundred years since in his pride,
Our grandsire brought his lovely bride,
To this, their future home."

Across the front gable of the old spring-house, concealing the middle window of the upper room, was the following, in large stenciled letters on white muslin:

"Our grandsire's hands this building reared,
Where dairy fruits were stored;
Whence came the butter, cream and milk
Which crowned their bounteous board.
And when the frosts of winter came,
So wisely was it planned,
Flowers bloomed below, while seeds above
Were stored to strew the land."

At the source of the spring, in the grove back of the spring-house, a small pump had been inserted, on which was suspended by a chain a pewter porringer, cast by Isaac Jackson, the clock-maker, grandson of the original settler, and brother of John, the botanist. On a post beside this was the mark, "The Legendary Spring." The bee-hives on the lawn near the spring house bore the mottoes:

"By industry we thrive
When not robbed."

---

"How doth the little busy bee
Improve each shining hour."

Within the front yard, on the west of the entrance gate, a temporary table had been prepared with writing materials, and here the guests on arriving were invited to register their names on sheets of paper, designed to be afterward bound in an album as a memento of the occasion. Although this invitation was publicly repeated from the stand more than once during the day, some of those present unfortunately failed to respond, but the signatures of nearly 800 descendants and connections were obtained.

About 11½ o'clock, A. M., the ringing of a large bell gave notice to those who had been wandering about the grounds, meeting old friends or making new acquaintances, to collect at the stand, where a large company soon gathered. Everard Conard, our host, in a few modest and appropriate words, offered to all present, on behalf of himself and family, a cordial welcome, and nominated as President of the meeting, John G. Jackson, of Hockessin, Delaware. Charles Canby, of Wilmington, Del., Halliday Jackson, of West Chester, Pa., and Mary J. Conard, were chosen Vice-presidents; and John I. Carter and Alice Lewis, Secretaries. The President on taking the chair, briefly expressed his sense of the honor conferred upon him, excusing himself from extended remarks at this time, as he had prepared an essay to be read later. Letters of response to the invitation, from several who were unable to attend, were read. This being merely a session for organization, prior to an adjournment for dinner, the programme of proceedings for the afternoon was announced. Halliday Jackson, by request, exhibited the original marriage certificate of William Jackson and Katharine Miller, in 1733, containing the autographs of Isaac Jackson and several of his children, with those of other friends and neighbors. This venerable document, yellow with age and much worn, had been carefully preserved by pasting it on muslin, and its appearance excited considerable interest. Charlton T. Lewis, of New York, moved that steps be taken to have it lithographed in fac-simile, and copies furnished to such of the descendants as desire it; and he and Halliday Jackson were appointed a committee to carry out the proposition.*

Chandler Darlington moved that measures be taken to have the proceedings of this meeting published in book form, and the Chairman appointed James M. Phillips to receive contributions to meet the expense of publication. The meeting then adjourned for dinner. This was taken in pic-nic style, most of the company having brought their provisions. Under the trees in the northwest corner of the garden, six long tables had been erected, which were occupied

* Charles Dingee mentioned that he remembered having seen, some years since, the original, as he believed, of the certificate of the marriage of Isaac Jackson and Ann Evans, and he thought it must still be in existence, though he knew not where. It was suggested that if found, it be copied also, and the suggestion was adopted. It may be mentioned here, that diligent search and inquiry have failed to bring to light the original document, the oldest copy yet found being evidently only a copy, as all the signatures are in the same hand-writing as the body of the paper—apparently that of a grandson of Isaac Jackson, the pioneer.

by various family parties. Another table was prepared in the southwest corner of the grove on the hill adjoining the garden proper on the north, and was appropriated to the Harmony Grove family, to which they invited such of the guests as were not otherwise provided for. In addition to these, some parties arranged for themselves temporary tables from boards found at hand. Some spread their feast upon the grass, either in the garden or upon the hill, while others betook themselves to their carriages, and thus the important business of the hour went forward with the accompaniment of cheerful talk and pleasant companionship.

About 1½ P. M., the bell was rung to call the meeting together. On motion of Charlton T. Lewis, a committee of publication was appointed, consisting of Francis A. Jackson, Susan M. Parrish and Alice Lewis, of Philadelphia, and Halliday Jackson, of West Chester. Some additional letters from absentees were read.

About this time, it was mentioned that some in the audience were desirous of seeing the host and hostess, and they accordingly came forward on the platform and were introduced to the assembly, who greeted them with applause. Some amusement was created by the appearance, on the stand, of two feminine representatives of the Jackson family, attired in veritable dresses of the olden time, with "long eared caps" and broad brimmed hats of felt, or beaver, tied down at the sides, who were facetiously introduced as "Ann Jackson and her daughter." It was then announced that a photographer was present, who wished to take a view of the meeting, and, at a given signal, all, by request, remained perfectly still for a short time, to allow this to be accomplished.

This being finished, Joseph J. Lewis, of West Chester, read a historical essay, embodying such information as he had been able to collect respecting the ancestry of Isaac Jackson, the immigrant, whose personal history and that of his immediate descendants were given, with brief sketches of some of those of later generations, mainly in the line of his son William, who succeeded his father in the occupancy of Harmony Grove. John G. Jackson followed, with an essay, which, as the two had been prepared without concert between the writers, covered in part the same ground, but differed in style and treatment. By special request of some of those interested, part of a versified description of Harmony Grove, as it was over sixty years ago, written in 1813, by Thomas Peirce, then of Chester County, Pa., and an intimate friend of the younger members of the family, was read by Sarah Pugh, of Philadelphia, who, as a child, was familiar with the place at that time. An essay, by Margaretta Jackson, of Kennett Square, Chester County, Pa., followed. Charlton T. Lewis read a portion of a poem written in reference to this occasion, by his son, a boy under twelve years of age. Next came the reading of a few stanzas, by Henry Peterson, of Philadelphia, entitled, "Abraham and Isaac." Chandler Darlington followed with some "rhymes" written by himself, on Harmony Grove: and Henry Peterson read a poem on the same theme, by his wife, Sarah W. Peterson. Yardley Warner, of Germantown, Pa., made a few remarks directed, for the most part, especially to the young people present, commending to them the virtues of their ancestors. Martha Schofield, of Aiken, S. C., then addressed the company in earnest and feeling words. Charles C. Burleigh closed this part of the proceedings with a brief, but eloquent, discourse. The following resolution was then moved, by Charlton T. Lewis, and adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That in the name of all the descendants of Isaac Jackson, the first settler on these premises, whether here present or scattered over the earth, we tender our hearty thanks to our host, and hostess, and their daughter, for the characteristically kind and hospitable manner in which they have welcomed us to-day."

This ended the proceedings of the meeting; and the hour for the arrival of the trains upon the railroad, being now near, the assemblage dispersed, and devoted the interval to social converse or parting words. About six o'clock, the train Baltimore-ward halted at the extemporized station, and, receiving its human freight, sped onward. The Philadelphia-bound train soon appeared also, and carried off many more; and thus ended a day which, to those present, must long remain a pleasant memory, as a time of pure and rational enjoyment, and as suited to arouse us to effort so to live as to prove ourselves not unworthy of our honorable descent.

Prepared by ALICE LEWIS.

LETTERS AND ADDRESSES.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF ISAAC W. JACKSON, OF SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

After expressing regret that circumstances forbid the journey, he says :

"I must forego the pleasure of meeting with my relatives at your hospitable call. Your meeting cannot fail to be one of the highest interest to all concerned. An assemblage of the descendants of honest, industrious, sufficiently enterprising, God-fearing, God-loving people.

"There will be, I think, very few 'Honorables,' so called, among you, not a single millionaire, (for who ever heard of a rich Jackson of our tribe,) few who have won much worldly distinction of any sort : but men and women who have discharged the providential responsibilities of their several stations in a manner that would have satisfied that good man, who in a community where all were honest was commonly called by his friends and neighbors, 'Honest William Jackson.' (Son of Isaac, the first, and grandson of Anthony.)

Such meetings as this are the appropriate occasions for the production of genealogical knowledge. * * * Let me conclude by thanking you heartily, as a member of the Jackson family, for throwing open your doors at this 'Sesqui-Centennial' gathering, and inviting them all to enter. May it be an occasion of great profit and enjoyment, social and spiritual, to those who are so fortunate as to be present."

EVERARD AND MARY JACKSON CONARD :

Dear Cousins :—I received, some time since, an invitation to the Sesqui-Centennial celebration of the landing of our common ancestor, Isaac Jackson.

It will no doubt be an interesting occasion, and it would be pleasant to me to meet some of my kindred after the flesh, who will probably be present, and with whom I seldom have the opportunity of mingling, and among these would be especially you and yours, but there are some considerations which will prevent me from doing so.

In thus declining, I would express my acknowledgment of your kindness, and my desire that it may prove a satisfactory and pleasant occasion ; and may all thus gathered at Harmony Grove, with the absent ones, be found not only among the invited but the accepted guests at the marriage supper of the Lamb, that throughout eternity we may unite with the ransomed and redeemed of all generations, in the one song of thanksgiving and praise.

With kind love to your family circle, and the assurance that it would give me pleasure to welcome you to my home, I am

Affectionately, your cousin,

ELIZABETH ALLEN.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUG. 6, 1875.

TO EVERARD AND MARY JACKSON CONARD :

My Dear Cousins :—I have received your kind invitation to attend the Pic-nic at Harmony Grove, in commemoration of the landing in this country and the settlement in Jackson Valley of our common ancestor, Isaac Jackson, in 1735. I regret that, living on the extreme verge of the Western Continent, I am so far distant from the home of my ancestors, that it is impracticable for me to be present.

* * * * I recollect well my great uncles, John and William Jackson. The former took me, a little boy, through his grand garden, and showed me the beautiful flowers and trees gathered from every quarter of the globe. It was at that time, in regard to size and variety of plants, the second if not the first, on the American Continent. My great uncle, William Jackson, was a kind, good man, easy in his manner and genial in his disposition. On a visit to his house, Aunt Hannah set out the table for a meal with the dishes used by them at the time of their marriage. The dishes were of wood, neatly turned, and the tea-cups of the smallest dimensions. Everything was very beautiful, and as these dishes must be still in the family, I trust that they will be included in your Pic-nic. Uncle William attended Yearly Meeting in 1827, and stopped with my father in Philadelphia. My sister Hannah had a new Leghorn hat, and coming home after meeting, while talking, my uncle came in unexpectedly. My sister expected a lecture on account of conforming too much to the "vanities of this world." She was agreeably surprised when my uncle said, going up and kissing her, "Cousin, how pretty thou art ! Dost thou know that thy mother was married in just such a bonnet as this?"

How well my mother was esteemed is evidenced by the number of relatives who bear her name. She died while I was an infant. My sister Hannah is said to have resembled her ; and Anna Lewis, brother Joseph's oldest daughter, who married Rev. Dr. Wentworth, and died in China, in manner and disposition bore a striking likeness to sister Hannah. In regard to mother, sister and niece, I may truly say :

"None knew them but to love them,
None named them but to praise."

My grandparents died before my birth. Grandfather, Isaac Jackson, was a prominent Friend, and an excellent mechanic. One of the first clocks made by him was a "regulator" without striking attachment, which belonged to my father, and is, I believe, now in possession of brother Joseph. Some thirty years ago, being at the house of Richard I. Downing, in Chester County, near Downingtown, he called my attention to a clock which was left him by his father, and which, he said, as a time-keeper had no superior. On looking at the face I saw, "Made by Isaac Jackson, New Garden, Chester County." Of course, I told him it was made by my grandfather.

You will please accept the above as my contribution to your Pic-nic, and you will not doubt that my heart is with you in this celebration.

With much love to all my relatives who will assemble on the 25th instant, I am your affectionate cousin,

WM. J. LEWIS.

ALAMEDA, CAL., AUG. 18, 1875.

EVERARD AND MARY J. CONARD:

Dear Cousins:—Just one week from to-day will be the grand gathering of the Jacksons at Harmony Grove. As the time approaches I realize more and more what a grand thing it is to carry out this undertaking, requiring from you no little strength, energy and spirit, and prompted by true kindness and generous hospitality to us all. Most heartily I thank you in the name of husband and children, for our kind invitation. We will join you spiritually, and sympathize with you in the happy meeting of so many friends. * * *

It must be thirty-five years since I last saw the dear old home—my mother's home—and it was because it was her home that we loved it so well; and how unutterably peaceful and beautiful is its memory. The scent of the box in the early morning as we entered the garden, the music of the birds, the deep shade of the beautiful trees, the cool spring in the green-house, and the rare and lovely plants that in Summer used to be set around the pond—everything comes back to me, out-doors and in, every room in the house and the position of the furniture. As vivid as any is the picture of my grandmother, sitting by the open fire in the old part of the house, built of logs, that used to be to the left as you entered the stone mansion. Father had called me in from my play to sit and hear grandma talk a while; little child as I was, I was struck with his tender, respectful manner towards her, for he knew her journey was almost done. I can imagine how full of peace was the end, the peace that passeth all knowledge, living as she had lived the good old Quaker life in the spirit and power that crucifies to the world.

* * *

Yours sincerely and affectionately.

MARY W. PALMER.

THE JACKSON FAMILY.

ADDRESS: BY JOSEPH J. LEWIS, OF WEST CHESTER, PENNSYLVANIA.

In a record of the Jackson family, a copy of which was furnished to William Jackson, of Philadelphia, while in Ireland, in 1870, it is stated, that the family, in some of its branches, can be traced back to a period prior to the Norman conquest. For this statement no authority is given, and we must be content to take it as we find it. The same, indeed, is said in an article on the subject, in an old encyclopedia, not long ago, if not even yet, to be seen in a public library in Dublin; but no reference is made to any document by which the fact is attested. The name, we know from undoubted sources, is as ancient as the language we speak, yet the several links of the genealogical chain, which connects the Jacksons of this generation with an ancestry of a far remote age, cannot now be determined by any trustworthy evidence within our reach.

Although we are unable to trace the ascending line of lineal consanguinity with distinctness beyond a limited period, this much, at least may be said with confidence, that the Jacksons are clearly and unequivocally, Anglo-Saxon. Those who are old enough to remember our grandsires still living in the early part of this century, will not need to be reminded of their physical characteristics, their firmly built and full-sized statures, and the general cast of their features—among which were the straight, or slightly aquiline nose, clear gray eyes, small mouth, and full rounded chin—attesting indubitably a Teutonic origin.

Of the ancestors of Isaac Jackson, the first immigrant to this country, and the patriarchal head of the American family, we have no definite knowledge beyond a single generation. We have no record of the name or residence of his grand-father, but as his father and uncle emigrated from Lancashire, in England, to the neighborhood of Carrickfergus, in Ireland, in 1649, we may reasonably infer that they were members of a numerous family of the name, in that part of the country from which they came, who still remain in the seats of their ancestors, and whose history, though generally obscure, is not without some luminous points.

The few traditions of them which now survive, indicate that they were men of decision of character, and firmness of purpose. In times when men, as Tennyson says, "had to dodge or duck or die," they appear to have been steadfast in their adherence to their convictions, and bold in their avowal of their religious opinions. On the twenty-seventh day of June, 1556, Ralph Jackson, with twelve others, suffered martyrdom at the stake, at Stratford, and thus inscribed his name on the glorious roll of those who preferred a cruel and terrible death, to a renunciation of what they deemed the truth; and a few months after John Jackson,* under the threat of a like fate, undauntedly faced his persecutors and defied their power. At that period of English history, the doctrine of liberty of conscience was treated by the ruling authorities, in church and state, as a flagrant impiety, and those that maintained it were deemed worthy of every extremity of punishment. In order that men should be awakened to a sense of the importance of the right of self-judgment in matters of religion, it was necessary that the principle should be upheld with a heroism ready to endure torture and death in its support. That the Jacksons should be found among the sufferers in no noble a cause, redounds to their honor and sheds a certain lustre on the name.

Men of such mould were not likely to be quiescent in stormy times, but whether they supported the fortunes of the house of York or Lancaster, or what part they took in the political strifes and troubles which involved the kingdom, during several centuries prior to the last civil war, we know nothing. It seems however

*The following examination of John Jackson, which appears to give his own closing testimony before he suffered for his religious principles, is taken from an old work on the "Suffering of the Martyrs" of the 16th century. H. J.

1556.—Examination of John Jackson before Dr. Cook.

When first I came before him, he railed and called me "heretic." I said, I am no heretic.

Cook.—Mr. Reed told me thou was the rankest heretic of all of them in the King's Bench.

Jackson.—I said, I knew him not.

Cook.—No! quoth he, yet he examined thee at the King's Bench.

Jackson.—He examined five others but not me.

Cook.—What sayest thou to the blessed sacrament of the Altar?

Jackson.—It is a diffuse question to ask me at the first dash, you promising to deliver me.

Cook.—What a heretic is this!

Jackson.—It is easier to call a man a heretic than to prove him one.

Cook.—What church art thou of?

that, in some way, they became entitled to wear a family coat of arms, and the device which it bore is stated to have been two greyhounds and a dolphin, signifying swiftness by land and sea; but what class of arms they were entitled to bear, we are not informed. As the right to family arms was the criterion which distinguished the gentleman from the peasant, the fact of the possession and exercise of that right has this value, that it indicates a certain degree of rank and consideration in the possessor.

In the great civil war, which terminated shortly before that branch of the family which is here represented left Lancashire, we cannot say, certainly, that our ancestors bore any part; but from what we know of their sentiments, and of the interest they were accustomed to take in passing events, we may reasonably infer that in a conflict between prerogative on the one hand, and privilege on the other, they were to be found only in the ranks of those that claimed the largest liberty, both in civil and ecclesiastical government, and that they were not inactive spectators of the exciting struggle so deeply affecting the "divine rights" of human nature. One thing we have undoubted evidence of, in a book still extant, that the father and uncle of Isaac Jackson, the first immigrant, were on terms of intimate friendship and in general agreement in sentiment with an officer in the parliamentary army, and there is a tradition that both the father and uncle accompanied Cromwell to Ireland, on his invasion of that country, and in his campaign against the Duke of Ormond.

Anthony Jackson is the first of the family to which we, that are here assembled, claim to belong. From him we can trace our

Jackson.—What church? quoth I: I am of the same church that is builded on the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the head corner-stone.

Cook.—Thou art a heretic.

Jackson.—How can that be, seeing I am of that church? I am sure you will not say that the prophets and apostles are heretics.

Cook.—But what sayest thou of the blessed sacrament of the Altar?

Jackson.—I find it not written.

Cook.—Keeper! Away with him!

But I had some further discourse with him and then he called again to the keeper—"have him to prison."

Jackson.—I am contented with that: and so we parted, and I answered no further in the matter because I thought he should not have my blood in a corner—but I hoped in the living God that when the time shall come before the congregation I shall shake their building in another manner of fashion; for they build both upon sand and their walls bedaubed with untempered mortar and therefore they cannot stand long. Therefore, good brothers and sisters, be of good cheer, for I trust in my God, I and my other prison-fellows go joyfully before you, praising God most heartily that we are counted worthy to be witnesses of the truth.—John Jackson.

descent in an unbroken line. He was born at Eccleston, in the parish of St. Michael, Lancashire, England, about the beginning of the second quarter of the seventeenth century. In 1649, he, in company with Richard Jackson, an elder brother, removed from the place of their nativity and settled in Lurgan, in the province of Ulster, Ireland. In the following year, Richard married in the neighboring city of Carrickfergus, Margaret Keete, who, like himself, was an emigrant from England. Anthony Jackson appears to have married some years later, but whom, or when, we are not informed. We are equally in the dark as to his children, except that he had a son Isaac who was born in 1662, and who, in advanced life, became the first purchaser from the provincial Proprietary, of the ground on which we now stand.

In 1648, George Fox, at the age of twenty-four, made his appearance as a preacher of righteousness at Manchester, England, and entered upon his extraordinary career. The exposition of his peculiar views created an unusual sensation, and subjected him to the denunciation of the clergy, the abuse of the populace, and to imprisonment by the public authorities. But in prison and out of prison, he continued to preach, and crowds continued to listen to him, even when he spoke through grated windows. When at liberty he traveled abroad, proclaiming his principles with a power and eloquence which procured him many proselytes, and which the most cruel persecution could not restrain. Of those who were convinced of his doctrines very early, were several persons of good education and high social position, who assisted to promulgate them, and they spread with great rapidity. They soon reached Ireland, and were heartily embraced by both Richard and Anthony Jackson.

It is to their credit, that the unpopularity of the new doctrine and its want of acceptability by the large majority, did not prevent them from adopting it, though they could not but understand, that whatever inward satisfaction it might offer them, it was sure to bring upon them the contempt of both the most ignorant, and what was deemed the most enlightened portion of society, as well as the knotted thong of the persecutor, wielded by a merciless hand. For the sake of the truth, as they understood it, they renounced the world and despised the shame, and, to the end of their lives, they continued, amid reproach and suffering, to maintain their principles.

In the spring of 1654, William Edmundson and six others, among whom were Richard and Anthony Jackson, established the first Friends' meeting at Lurgan. William Edmundson was a minister of note, and he left a journal of his life and travels in the ministry, which is still extant, and in which the name of Robert Jackson, believed to be a son of Richard Jackson, who sometimes accompanied him in his religious visits, frequently appears.

In the year 1655, induced by the promise of an extensive landholder in the county of Cavan, he went thither and purchased leases of several parcels of land for himself and certain of his friends, who were willing to go with him, among whom were Richard and Anthony Jackson. They removed the same year from Lurgan to Cavan with their families, and constituting a little settlement of kindred spirits, they established a Friends' meeting there. In a short time they found that the promises of their landlord were delusive. The tenants became dissatisfied, and several of them threw up their leases, and removed to Mountmellick. Of those who took this decisive step rather than submit to injustice, were William Edmundson and Richard Jackson, between whom the most intimate relations seem to have subsisted. This removal took place in 1659, and as a consequence a Friends' meeting was organized at Mountmellick, of which William Edmundson and Richard Jackson were leading members. Anthony Jackson, for some reason, preferred to remain at Cavan, and as far as we have any information, he continued to reside there the rest of his life.

The persecutions to which Friends were subjected in Ireland began at an early date. The history of these persecutions is preserved in the minutes of the several Monthly Meetings, in the journals of some of the sufferers, and in various contemporary documents. Thus, it is stated in the minutes of Carlow Monthly Meeting of 1658, that Richard Jackson and other Friends "met together at Mountmellick to wait upon the Lord, and one John Partridge, a priest, with a rude company, broke into the meeting and abused the Friends very much, both by words and actions."

It is also stated, that in 1660, William Edmundson, Richard Jackson, and others, "met together at Mountmellick, and for so meeting were arrested and bound over to the Sessions, and on being tried were fined forty shillings each, and kept in prison fourteen weeks."

And again, that Richard Jackson and others, "for not paying their church dues, were excommunicated and imprisoned, and their excommunication published in the church and market-place, and by it people were charged not to buy of or sell to them, and they were informed, that for whatever injury they did those excommunicated persons, there was no redress or remedy by law."

By this ingenious device of ecclesiastical cruelty, it was sought to put under the ban of society the most innocent and peaceable subjects of the realm, to deprive them of the protection of the law, and subject them to every species of outrage which lawlessness, stimulated by fanaticism, could inflict. Happily for them, their innocence, integrity and Christian humility won them general sympathy, and afforded them a protection, which in large measure defeated the malignant purposes of their persecutors.

In 1661, there was a general imprisonment of Friends throughout Ireland. Richard Jackson was again among the sufferers, with six others of his particular meeting; and Anthony Jackson, it is believed, did not escape.

Other instances of fine and imprisonment are noted; and distraint of goods for refusing to pay tithes, though seldom mentioned, must have been of frequent occurrence; so frequent indeed, as to have become a common experience, and to be regarded by the non-conforming and conscientious Quaker, as a legal impost upon his religious convictions.

These persecutions continued till 1696, when an act of Parliament was passed, which relieved members of the Society of Friends from the penalties prescribed by law, for their refusal to take certain oaths. Such refusal had for forty years been made the pretense for their being fined and imprisoned, through the malice of sectaries, and the petty tyranny of inferior magistrates.

Whether Anthony Jackson lived to see that day of partial toleration we are not informed. Richard Jackson died in 1679, leaving a family of children. A large number of his descendants still reside in Ireland. Anthony Jackson's son Isaac, who is the only one of his children of whom we have any definite information, was carefully educated in the principles of Friends, and was an exemplary and consistent member of the Society. In the year 1696, he married Ann Evans, a daughter of Roland Evans, of the city of Wicklow, and settled near Ballitore, within the limits of the Monthly Meeting of Carlow, to which he belonged. He had a family of ten children, three of whom, we find by the record, were named Isaac. The eldest of the name died in infancy, the second fared no better; the father, not deterred by the ill-fortune which seemed to attend on the name, persisted in having it in the family, and gave it to his youngest son, who happily carried it to manhood.

In an old memoir, it is said of Isaac and Ann Jackson that "they were Friends in good esteem, who, by their industry and care, in part by farming, but principally in the weaving business, maintained their large family with reputation."

When about sixty years of age, Isaac and Ann Jackson began to look toward America as their future home. Their eldest daughter Rebecca, who had married Jeremiah Starr, was already settled in Pennsylvania, with good prospects, and the minds of the father and mother were drawn strongly together in the same direction. The memoir states, that they had the subject of their emigration "under weighty consideration" for several years, and they at length informed their friends of it. "While they were under exercise and concern of mind," I quote from the memoir, "and desirous that best wisdom might direct, Isaac had a dream or vision to this import—that having landed in America he traveled a considerable distance back into the country till he came to a valley between two hills. Through this valley ran a pretty stream of water. The prospect and situation of the place seemed pleasant, and, in his dream, he thought his family must settle there, though a wilderness unimproved."

Whether this remarkable dream influenced his determination, we are not told; but, however that may be, he and his family soon after embarked on the ship Lizar, at Dublin, and after a tedious passage, landed at New Castle, on the eleventh day of September, 1725. From New Castle he proceeded to the house of his son-in-law, Jeremiah Starr, who was residing on a farm he had purchased, in what is now New Garden township. There Isaac Jackson related his dream, and, as the memoir continues "was informed of such a place near. He soon went to see it, which to his admiration so resembled what he had a foresight of, that it was a cause of joy and thankfulness."

Thus far the memoir; but tradition—as it existed some seventy years ago, when several of the grand-children of the venerable patriarch, to whom the visionary picture of his future home was thus presented, were still alive, and having seen and conversed with their grandsire, may have heard the singular story from his own lips—added, that he was shown in his dream, on the hillside a spring of water near which he and his family should settle; and that it was impressed upon him, that not only he and they should dwell there, but that his descendants should occupy the land for generations. By the same tradition it was further said that a single tract of four hundred acres of land, including the pleasant valley seen by the dreamer, was the only one in that vicinity which had not already been taken up by previous settlers. He doubtless regarded it as a land of promise to himself and family, and he hastened to become master of it by lawful title. Although far advanced in life for such an undertaking, he went resolutely to work, and, with the assistance of several stalwart sons, built a cabin, made a clearing, and in due time had the satisfaction of establishing a comfortable home, surrounded by the fruits of his industry and enterprise, which, for nearly a quarter of a century, he lived to enjoy. His posterity still hold the family seat, after the lapse of one hundred and fifty years; and we see here around us to-day the same hills, and spread out before us the same beautiful valley, hillside fountain, and pleasant stream, which were pictured to his inward eye, three thousand miles away; and, though the prospect has undergone a change, and the wilderness has blossomed with all the forms of beauty which skilful cultivation could produce, the main characteristics of the scene are the same. Whether the dream was prophetic, or whether the close agreement between what was dreamed and what afterwards occurred, were merely fortuitous, we may leave for those who choose to speculate on the subject to decide. I have only to deal with the facts as they existed, and they, as stated, are well authenticated.

Isaac Jackson brought with him from Ireland, a certificate of membership from Carlow to New Garden Monthly Meeting, for himself and his wife, and he was soon after appointed an overseer, and subsequently an elder of that meeting. In this latter station he continued to serve till 1744, when, having reached his eighty-first year, his growing infirmities induced him to resign. In 1750 he died, in his eighty-seventh year. By his will, he devised to his son William, all his landed estate, he having remained with his father and assisted him in his struggles with the hardships of a frontier life. To his other children he gave pecuniary legacies.

William Jackson was the third son of Isaac and Ann Jackson, and was born, according to the record, Second month 24th, 1705.

He appears to have been a man of more than usual activity and energy. He was a useful member of society, a shining example of probity and virtue, careful, attentive and successful in business; he occupied, with credit, prominent positions in his religious society, and he was particularly remarkable for his large and liberal hospitality. His house was the common resort of Friends traveling in the ministry, with whom both he and his wife were ever in sympathy. In 1733, he married Katharine, a daughter of James Miller, who, with his family, had removed from Timahoe, in Ireland, and settled in New Garden, within a half mile of the meeting house. She is remembered as a woman of superior mind, active in all good works, and much engaged in the service of the Society of Friends, of which she was a consistent, exemplary, and highly respected member.

William and his wife continued, after the death of Isaac, to reside at the old family seat, which they largely improved. They had a family of ten children, five sons and as many daughters. For the first two sons, Isaac and James, the father purchased farms, and, on their marrying, set them up in business. By his will, he divided the mansion place between his two younger sons, William and John. To William he gave the western division, and to John, the eastern, including the family dwelling, built by himself in 1775, in the seventy-first year of his age. Katharine's death preceded that of her husband by more than four years. They had endeared themselves by their beneficence, kindness and meekness of spirit, to a large circle of friends, and they died universally beloved and revered.

William Jackson, fourth son of William and Katharine Jackson, was remarkable in youth for stability of character and seriousness of demeanor, and, as early as 1775, he became an approved minister. In 1778, he married Hannah, a daughter of Thomas and Hannah Seaman, of Westbury, Long Island, and went to reside there with his wife. After about two years, he returned to the place of his nativity, and, for the remainder of his life, lived on that part of the farm which was afterwards devised to him by his father. In 1802-3 and 4, he traveled through England and Ireland, on a religious visit, and was absent about three years; during which time he attended nearly all the meetings of Friends, in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and some of them repeatedly. He also visited, at different times, Friends in Maryland,

Virginia, New York, and New England. At one time, he was absent from home, in the prosecution of his religious labors, for more than a year, traveling through State after State, in the work of the ministry. His engagements, in this way, continued occasionally, till he was about seventy-eight years old; after which, he ceased to travel beyond the limits of his own Yearly Meeting. He had no children, was in easy circumstances, simple and economical in his habits, and not desirous of pecuniary gain. He would never lend money at a rate of interest exceeding five per cent, and he frequently required but four, and he allowed his debtors to pay very much as suited their own convenience. His chief interest was in the concerns of his religious society, and in the promulgation of the truth, as he understood it; and, though diligent in business, in the intervals of his religious labors, he was indifferent as to its profits. A desk, which by his will he gave to a grand nephew, with its contents, was found to contain gold and silver coin, in amount upwards of four hundred dollars, which had obviously been carelessly thrown in, as received in different sums, without being cared for afterwards; and various other sums of money were found in drawers and cupboards and such like places, not secreted, or apparently subjects of any special care. He was punctitious in his adherence to plainness of dress, and in his style of living; and he avoided all innovations that had the aspect or semblance of luxury. The ancient trencher, with its fitting accompaniment, adorned his family table long after it had disappeared from every other household in the neighborhood. In all respects, he was a thorough Friend of the elder type, and continued to the end of his life to be an example of what manner of man a solid Friend was, before the laxity of modern manners had encroached upon the drab colored simplicity of the ancient fathers of the church. He was grave and dignified, yet in social intercourse he was habitually cheerful, and he had a genial vein of innocent humor which enhanced the pleasure of his conversation.

In all matters of church discipline he was an authority, and his judgment in business meetings of the society was more than respected—it was of such weight as to be usually decisive. His opinions were thought by some to betray a touch of severity, but no one doubted that the natural flow of his feelings was genial and kindly, and that his heart was the seat of the most generous and tender emotions. His wife was a woman of intelligence and devoted piety, sprightly in conversation and active in all good works. Mutual affection and esteem assisted to brighten and sweeten their lives for more than fifty years. They both lived to a good old age. He survived her but a short time, and died on the tenth day of January, 1834, in the eighty-eighth year of his age. By his will he devised a part of the land given him by his father to his grand nephew, Isaac Jackson, son of his nephew and neighbor, William Jackson. This grand-nephew was intended by his father, in honor of his uncle, to be named William, but the uncle interposed and requested that the child should bear the name of the primitive settler; and that request was complied with. The part devised to Isaac, consisted of about one hundred acres lying adjacent to that part of the old family estate of which the nephew William has become the owner.

John Jackson, to whom his father devised the eastern division of his farm, resided upon it till his decease. He applied himself indurtriously to its cultivation and improvement, and was an active man of business till considerably past middle life. He possessed no small amount of botanical knowledge, and delighting in the culture of plants and flowers, of which he collected a great variety, both of foreign and domestic origin, he planted a large and beautiful garden, which he cultivated with assiduous care, and to which he devoted almost his whole attention during the later years of his life. He married under the age of twenty-seven, Mary Harlan, a daughter of Joel and Hannah Harlan, and raised a family of seven children, to whom he gave advantages of education superior to those usually accorded in his day to farmer's children, and as they grew up they brought around them by their information and culture an agreeable and interesting circle of friends and acquaintances, so that Harmony Grove, as the old family seat was designated, became a place of rare attractions. No where indeed in Chester county was better society to be found than beneath the roof and at the table of John Jackson, who long maintained, and dispensed with a liberal hand, the traditional hospitality of the house. Though a decided Friend in his sentiments, and in the plainness of his dress and simplicity of his manners one of the pattern of the olden time, he took much less interest in the affairs of his religious society than his brother William, and was never a prominent man in the church, nor as far as is now recollected served in any high position. He died in the year 1821, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, having devised his real estate to his son William.

William Jackson, the third of the name in lineal descent from Isaac, the first emigrant to America, was born November 7th, 1789, and was about thirty-two years old at the time of his father's decease. Many of those who are here assembled knew him well, and some during the early years of his life. My knowledge of him began when he was at school, a student of mathematics under my father's direction, and he was then remarkable for his quiet demeanor, his studious habits, and for the reflective and ratiocinative character of his mind. He was not a miscellaneous reader, but what he did read, he read with close attention and discrimination, and he was by no means liable to be misled by the ingenuity or eloquence of any author. He was a calm, clear reasoner and accurate thinker, deliberate and unimpassioned without a touch of enthusiasm, or coloring of imagination, seeking truth by the most direct processes, and never bewildered in the pursuit by false lights, however brilliant or dazzling. His judgment was eminently judicial. He approached his conclusions by slow and cautious steps, uninfluenced by his wishes or his hopes. He was interested in all social problems, had faith in human progress, but distrusted all sanguine expectations, discarded rose-colored theories, and made large allowances for the disturbing and retroactive influences of interest, of ambition and of the stolid conservatism of associated wealth. Though he was well acquainted with the principles of our government and with those which regulate the distribution of wealth and the increase of population, and in many respects was well qualified for usefulness in public life, he was not a politician in the baser sense of the word, and regarded popularity and the honors of office with equal indifference. He was at one time, much to his surprise, placed on the ticket of a party with which he had slight affiliation, and elected a member of the State Senate. He served his term with credit, and was highly esteemed in that body, for his integrity, intelligence and accuracy of judgment, and whenever he spoke he commanded attention by the clearness of his statements and the cogency of his reasoning. But he was not a partisan, and could not manage or be managed, and his single term in the Senate was his whole experience in political life.

The anti-slavery movement enlisted his warmest sympathies, and he was for many years actively engaged in the promulgation of its principles. To his sense of justice, indeed, slavery was always abhorrent, and from his early youth he was a zealous advocate of emancipation.

In the branch of the Society of Friends to which he was attached, he was repeatedly chosen clerk of the Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, for which positions he was peculiarly well fitted, by the habitual calmness of his temperament and the cool impartiality of his judgment.

It is hardly necessary to add, in this presence, that in domestic life, the traditional kindness of the Jackson nature was not wanting in him. In all family relations he was the pattern of a Christian gentleman. He died in the year 1864, universally lamented, and leaving behind him the record of a well spent life.

By his will, he devised his landed estate to his son Isaac, to whom the second William Jackson (the minister), as already mentioned, had left an hundred acres of the old patrimony adjoining. Thus this Isaac, the son of the third William, became the owner of a large part of the tract which the first Isaac had settled upon in 1725. But it was left to him, too heavily incumbered by legacies, to be long retained; and, after a few years, it was sold to Everard Conard, who though not a Jackson himself, is married to Mary T., a daughter of the last William, and a sister of the last Isaac. Thus the old family seat has now come to the possession of our worthy host and hostess, the latter of whom, though a Conard, is still a Jackson, and a lineal descendant of him whose axe first resounded on these hills and whose ploughshare first clave the soil of this valley. May their descendants a hundred and fifty years hence, when the ter-centennial jubilee of the Jacksons, celebrating the landing on these shores of the father of the American family of that name, shall occur, still rejoice in the proprietorship of these surrounding hills and this beautiful valley, and by imitating the virtues of their ancestors may they entitle themselves to the privilege of possessing and transmitting this ancient and goodly inheritance to other generations.

On an occasion like this I could not, without taxing unreasonably the patience of the persons assembled, do more than sketch with a rapid and hasty pen the portraits of the successive occupants of the family seat, and the leading incidents of their quiet lives, from the time of the original settler to the death of the father of the present holders. Of those that left the old home in early youth to push their fortunes elsewhere, and of their families rapidly multiplying, I can speak only in the most general terms. They have become associated and connected with the Gibsons, the Windles, the Philippses, the Taylors, the Kimbers, the Pughs, the Dingees, the Monaghans, the Prices, the Ladleys, the Starrs, the Millers, the Harlans, the Hoppers, the Allens and the Lewises. Their name is legion. They are scattered abroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They may be traced from New York to San Francisco, and are to be found in at least seventeen states of this Union. Some are physicians, some editors of newspapers, some professors in colleges, some merchants, some mechanics, many are teachers, more are farmers, and a few are lawyers, though as to these last, the old fathers regarded the profession with anything but favor. As an illustration of their prejudice against the law, a remark of my grandfather, Isaac Jackson, may be mentioned. When told by a young relation in whom he took some interest, that he was preparing to be a lawyer, "I would rather," said the old man, "that thou wast preparing to be a chimney sweep." It was well perhaps for the old gentleman's peace of mind that he did not live too long; for that six of his grandchildren should be of that despised guild might have made him unhappy. Notwithstanding this departure in a few instances from the primitive rule among Friends with regard to a proper avocation, I may say of the Jacksons, that with fewer exceptions than usually occur in families of such immense extent, they have a standing of respectability and solid worth, and have approved themselves valuable members of society, intelligent, capable, and measurably successful in whatever line of effort their energies have been directed.

Some have been remarkable for their benevolence, some have earned reputation by their learning, and some have been admired for their eloquence. The Isaac Jackson, my grandfather, to whom I have referred on account of his left-handed compliment to the legal profession, was noted in his day, for his efforts on behalf of the people of color. He lived in New Garden on a farm bought for him by his father, William Jackson, and being within a short distance of the Maryland line, he was frequently called upon to interpose, when free negroes were captured on false pretences—as they often were—and claimed as slaves, and when fugitives from slavery were pursued and reclaimed. On such occasions, he and Jacob Lindley usually acted together, and they were, sometimes, involved in considerable personal danger; for the claimants were generally armed, and well attended, and they were always vindictive, and very often desperate. The efforts of the two friends were in many instances effective; and not a few of the oppressed race owed to them their freedom. The dwelling of Isaac Jackson was, for many years, a refuge for those who were escaping from slavery, and they were always sure of assistance at his hands. In 1758 he labored, in conjunction with John Woolman and others, to induce the Yearly Meeting of Friends in Philadelphia to take some steps for the emancipation of all slaves held by members of the Society. They were happily successful. It was advised by the Meeting that Friends, who held slaves, should set them at liberty; and committees were appointed to visit them. Isaac Jackson, in this service, visited the owners of more than eleven hundred slaves within the limits of a single Quarterly Meeting, and made a report which is referred to in Mr. Whittier's introduction to the Journal of John Woolman, stating as the result of his labors that far the greater number of the persons visited confessed the wrong of slavery, and agreed to take measures for freeing their slaves. The advisory measures of 1758, were followed by the manumission of many slaves, by members of the Society; and in 1776, the Yearly Meeting, by directing subordinate Meetings to deny the right of membership to all persons who persisted in holding their fellow creatures in bondage, cleared the skirts of the Society of the iniquity of slaveholding. To this end, Isaac Jackson labored assiduously, and being conspicuous by his intelligence and wisdom in the work, he was appointed clerk of the Yearly Meeting. Toward the latter part of his life, he was not much engaged in the concerns of his religious society, but was interested in all efforts for social melioration. His hospitality, without being ostentatious, was singularly liberal. He built a stable separate from his farm buildings, for the accomodation of his visitors' horses, and no man of any note visited the neighborhood who was not a guest at his table. He had twelve children, eleven of whom survived him. He died in 1807, aged seventy-three years.

Dr. Samuel Jackson, who was the youngest son of Isaac Jackson, of New Garden, and who recently died in Philadelphia, at the age of eighty-two, was an elegant scholar, a forcible writer, and profoundly learned in his profession. After graduating as M. D., at the University of Pennsylvania, he settled at Northumberland, in this State, where he remained till beyond middle age, in the enjoyment of a large medical practice. His eldest son, William Arthur Jackson, was a young man of fine abilities and elegant accomplishments, and was associated, in the practice of the law, with the Hon. John M. Read, late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. He died at the age of twenty-nine, just as the assurance of a successful and brilliant career, as a lawyer and advocate, seemed almost complete. A second son, Francis Aristides Jackson, has been Professor of Latin at the University of Pennsylvania for upwards of twenty years, though not yet past the meridian of life.

Alice, the fifth daughter of Isaac Jackson, of New Garden, was a lady of rare endowments, an admirable speaker, and gifted preacher in the Society of Friends. I have heard my father, who was an acute literary critic, say of her, "her fluency and command of language were extraordinary. I never knew her to utter a sentence, either in her public speaking, or in social conversation, that I could mend." When about thirty years of age she brought the subject of Friends using the products of slave labor before the Yearly Meeting of Philadelphia, in an address, which made a profound impression on that body, and constituted the first step to the formation of the Free Produce Association, organized some years afterwards. A gentleman, who knew her well, once said of her; "she could not enter a retail store to buy a yard of tape, without leaving the impression that she was a superior woman." She had a fine face, features of the Grecian mould, and a tall and handsome form, and her carriage was queenly in dignity and self command. She was universally admired for the graces of her person, and honored, loved, and I may truly say, revered, for the graces of her mind and the qualities of her heart. Her society was attractive alike to the old and the young, the grave and the gay, the witty and the wise, and even the simple; for there was a genial glow in her conversation, a warmth and tenderness of feeling, and a singular felicity of thought and expression, that could not fail to interest even the dullest intellect, and to touch the coldest bosom. In her large household, including the pupils of her husband's boarding school, she was regarded as mother, sister, friend, and confidential adviser, to whom every one might look when counsel, or sympathy, or kindly care was needed; and in whose ready resources and tender appliances there was relief for every trouble, and balm for every wound. The late Judge Haines, who was one of those pupils, a short time before his decease, remarked of her, "The love we scholars had for her amounted to enthusiasm. I never knew a woman whom I so delighted to please, and whom I so dreaded to offend. The fear of forfeiting her good opinion was an ever present restraint upon me, and I believe every boy in the school felt more or less the same way." The home that she irradiated by her intelligence and hallowed by the charm of her loving spirit, is still sacred in the memories of those whose privilege it was to partake of the sweet influences which flowed around her, and although sixty years have elapsed since she went to her last rest, those influences have not been wholly dissipated by all the shocks and blasts of the intervening time. If I were to attempt to delineate her character, I should say much more; but though the theme is one which I cannot touch without emotion, I could not, either in justice to her or my own feelings, say less; for she was my mother.

Halliday Jackson, a great-grand-son of Isaac Jackson, (the first), spent several years as a missionary of the Yearly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia, among the Seneca Indians, instructing them in the arts of civilized life; and after his return, he published a book entitled "Civilization of the Indian Natives." Hannah Jackson, a daughter of the second Isaac Jackson, (of New Garden), spent fifteen years in the early part of her life in the same benevolent enterprise.

John Jackson, a son of Halliday Jackson, was distinguished both for his eloquence and his learning. When quite a young man he became a preacher in the Society of Friends, and soon established a high character as a powerful and eloquent preacher. He traveled somewhat in the work of the ministry, in this and other States, and in 1840, visited the West Indies. His vocation was that of a teacher. He established a boarding school in Delaware County, Pennsylvania, and while teaching the mathematics and other branches of an ordinary English education, cultivated with enthusiasm, astronomy and the natural sciences. He erected an observatory and furnished it with expensive apparatus, and collected an extensive cabinet of minerals and fossils. His natural fluency and facility in explanation, rendered his lectures on scientific subjects peculiarly interesting and attractive. He was cut down by death before the fruits of his laborious studies had fully matured, or the powers of his intellect had become thoroughly developed.

There are others of whom I might speak, if time would permit, besides General Andrew Jackson, who is supposed to have been a branch of the same family. The father of Andrew Jackson emigrated in 1765, from Carrickfergus, in Ireland, near which city Anthony Jackson settled in 1649, and I remember to have heard it said by some of our relatives, before Andrew Jackson became President, that he was descended from a brother of Richard and Anthony Jackson, and that the brother removed from England to Ireland, at or about the same time they did, but as he did not connect himself with the despised and persecuted sect of Quakers, it was suggested that he became estranged from his brothers on that account, and lapsed into poverty. Whether this is accurate or not, I have not the means of judging.

Among those of the name who have been noted for their superior attainments and private worth, is Isaac W. Jackson, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in Union College, Schenectady, New York. He was the eldest son of William Jackson, third son of Isaac Jackson, of New Garden, and he was thus of the fourth generation of the descendants of the first immigrant and original purchaser of this family homestead. He was born in Orange county, in the State of New York, August 28th, 1804. His early education was in the bosom of the Society of Friends, of which his father and mother were consistent and prominent members. At the age of seventeen, having determined on taking a regular collegiate course, he entered the Albany Academy and prosecuted his mathematical and classical studies with his habitual industry, and with more than usual success. His plain dress and the quiet simplicity of his manners, in a class in which there were no other Friends' children, were noticeable peculiarities, and not only attracted attention, but at first were subjects of ridicule with some of his class-mates; but the little Quaker lad, for he was then small of stature, soon evinced a capacity which excited the admiration of his teachers and fellow-pupils, and rendered all suggestions of ridicule or contempt preposterous. He took the lead in all his studies, mathematical and classical, and was generally regarded as a youth of high promise. In 1824, he graduated at the Academy, and immediately entered Union College, and became a member of a class to which belonged Horace Potter, William F. Allen, Thomas Hun, Amos Dean, and others who afterwards became eminent in professional life. In this class he was by common consent easily first in mathematics and chemistry, while in Greek and Latin he had few superiors. In 1826, he graduated with the first honors of the college, and was immediately appointed to a tutorship in the institution, and in 1831 he became professor of mathematics. This position he still retains, after forty-four years of efficient and acceptable service. He has always been a favorite with the pupils, on account of the thoroughness of his teaching, and the amenity of his manners.

While he was in his junior year in college, a military organization was formed by the college students with the consent of the faculty, and he was unanimously chosen captain by one of the companies. He thus acquired the sobriquet of Captain Jack, by which he has been familiarly and affectionately known by the undergraduates from that time to the present.

Professor Jackson is the author of several valuable text books which have been used in Union and other colleges. In these he has treated the subjects of them, trigonometry, conic sections, mechanics and optics, with singular perspicuity, and admirable simplicity and purity of style, and they are without doubt among the best of our elementary school books. He has what especially qualifies him to write on scientific subjects for the benefit of the learner, a just perception of the difficulties that are to be encountered in the primary steps, a capacity for logical arrangement and for clear expression, and a taste pure even to severity. His treatises are therefore like his class prelections, easily comprehended and leaving no obscurities of matter or phrase to perplex the learner.

Professor Jackson's present infirm health has prevented him from being present to take part in this celebration. Being advised of this, I have spoken of him in terms which I would not have used had he been of our company, but which nevertheless are not nearly so emphatic as those which the fifty successive classes, during as many years, in their loving admiration of their aged preceptor would demand.*

*Since this address was delivered Professor Jackson has paid the debt of nature. He died at his home in Schenectady, August 27, 1877. On the Semi-centennial Anniversary of his connection with the Faculty of Union College, which occurred in June, 1876, and which was celebrated by a banquet of the Alumni with appropriate ceremonies, Tayler Lewis, LL.D., an able writer and most accomplished scholar, delivered an address, in which, among other things expressive of his sense of the merits of Dr. Jackson, he said: "It is a great pleasure to me, even in this poor way, to congratulate my old friend. He has lived a most useful and honorable life. It must have been a happy one. To say nothing here of that all-transcending element of the Divine grace, in which I trust he has been a sharer, there are two things favorable to serene existence that he has enjoyed to the full. He has for fifty years been a student and an author, as well as a teacher, in the department of the pure mathematics, so called from their crystal clarity compared with the mixed and

William A. Jackson, eldest son of Professor Isaac W. Jackson, was one of those who early acquired reputation as a public speaker and debater. In these accomplishments he was acknowledged without a rival among his college contemporaries, and at a later period they shone with effect on the field of political discussion, and in the struggles and competitions of the bar. In 1861, when just twenty-nine, deeming it his duty to assist to suppress the great rebellion which threatened to overthrow our free institutions and destroy the government, he relinquished a lucrative and increasing practice, and raised a regiment, of which he was elected colonel, and which he disciplined with great labor and care. In June of the same year he joined the army of the Potomac, and took part in the battles of the 18th of July and the 30th of the same month. In both his conduct was gallant and meritorious, and his men behaved with the steadiness of veterans. During the confusion of a disgraceful panic and the wild disorder of a rapid retreat, he held his regiment in perfect order, and quit the field only by the command of his superior officer after almost every other regiment had broken and fled. His eminent fitness for his new profession was thus early displayed, and high honors seemed to await him, when he was seized by a fatal disease which terminated in his death on the eleventh of November, 1861. Many glowing tributes have been paid to his memory. In one of them he is described as "a gentleman by instinct and education, of a fine person and fascinating manners, a large heart and a true and genial nature; endowed with rare intellect enriched by a varied and manly education, he became the idol of every circle in which he mingled, the pride of his family and a favorite with the public. As a public speaker Colonel Jackson was forcible and eloquent, and to rare conversational powers he added the pen of a ready and elegant writer."

Of those in whose veins runs the blood of our first known ancestor, physical branches. He has had a clear mind constantly gazing on the science of certainty—a still higher title, by which it may be called, in contrast with the dimness and doubt and shadow that rest upon almost all the provinces of human thought." * * * "Of the love of his classes he is sure. The warm esteem of every one who has ever sat under his teaching, the unfeigned respect of all who have been his colleagues—this is his literary inheritance as long as Union College holds a place among the institutions of our land."

Ex-governor Hoffman, who presided at the banquet, Judge Wm. F. Allen, Rev. Dr. Van Sanevoord, Judge Jermain, Dr. Murray, and other gentlemen of distinction made speeches on the occasion, and testified to their high respect and kindly regard for Dr. Jackson, and to their grateful recollections of his services as a faithful, efficient and thorough instructor, who, in the fulness and accuracy of his learning, never lost for a moment his wonted benignity.

and who are yet living and able to take part in this celebration, I shall say nothing. They are carving out names of which the world may speak hereafter. Their works and merits will properly become the theme of the orator at the next centennial anniversary of the landing of Isaac Jackson at New Castle, who we may trust will do full justice to those that shall, in the great battle of life, have specially deserved to be honorably remembered.

In conclusion it is to be observed that the religious principles professed by our ancestors, and for which some of them suffered the persecution, in past ages almost invariably attendant upon any marked advance in the march of opinion, have been generally maintained by their descendants. When we consider what those principles are, what is their tendency, how they affect society, and what is their agency in working out the regeneration of mankind, we shall appreciate the large debt of gratitude we owe to those faithful lovers of truth who have been our teachers and our guides, and who, not for their own sakes only, but for ours also, have sought through peril and pain the path that leads to peace. The fact alone that they cherished those principles with the utmost affection, that they clung to them from youth to age with unyielding tenacity in all the changes and vicissitudes of life, in revolutions of government and fluctuations of opinion, is evidence not only of the value they set upon them, but of the power of their influence on conduct and character.

In inquiring therefore what those principles are to which our progenitors have thus exhibited their devotion, we are not transcending the limits of our subject or the proprieties of the occasion.

I have already said that Richard and Anthony Jackson were among the earliest converts to Quakerism, and that their descendants have generally adhered to the religious doctrines of Fox and Barclay. Those doctrines, indeed, when fully understood and impressed on the mind, are not easily relinquished, renounced, or exchanged for any others; for they claim for themselves a source of indubitable veracity, and for humanity the highest and noblest prerogatives.

The moral philosophy of Quakerism differs from that of all other sects and schools, and is at once more simple and more profound. It is founded indeed, like the system of Descartes, on consciousness, but in a sense somewhat different and more comprehensive than that in which it is used in the Cartesian philosophy, from which it borrowing nothing and differs wholly in all its essential principles and practical results. It stands on a higher and broader basis than that. It not only admits that thought necessitates a thinker—"cogito, ergo sum"—; but it insists that from the existence of a sense of right and wrong in the constitution of humanity, the existence of an element capable of being impressed and effected through the medium of that sense is clearly implied; that element, which we call the human soul, possessing, intuitively and untaught, the knowledge of good and evil, blends with our psychical being, over which it dominates, and constitutes a side of our nature that holds relations, of which it is conscious, with the Infinite. To the assiduous cultivation of these relations, Quakerism commends its votaries. It ascribes the cognition of moral truth to the influence of the Holy Spirit, which comes to man through those relations. It appeals to every man's own breast for the evidence of the existence of a divine monitor as to his duty to his Creator and to his fellow men. Without this monitor it affirms that he can know nothing of virtue, or religion, or of God; and that with it he may know all that it is necessary for him, as a moral agent, to know. It regards this inward monitor as a universal teacher—an attribute of man's being, of whose presence, admonitions, consolations and warnings, he is equally cognizant as of any physical fact.

It holds that faith in those great truths which lie beyond the grasp or ken of science, is inexplicable, except on the principle of a divine instinct, which, implanted in every breast, comprehends them, not only without logical proof, but with a certitude superior to rationalistic demonstration; that religious faith being of divine implantation, it is competent for it to embrace the whole circle of Christian doctrine and duty, on the evidence solely of the witness within, and needs no support from scholastic learning or the authority of tradition; and that the inscription of God's will on the heart, is the supreme law of our being, of imperative obligation under all circumstances—the only perfect standard of rectitude and ultimate rule of duty.

Thus George Fox declared his mission to be to direct people "to the Spirit which gave forth the Scriptures, by which they might be led into all truth, to turn them to that inward light, by which they might know their salvation and their way to God;—and to show them how every man is enlightened by the Divine light of Christ." "This inward illumination," says Barclay, "is that which is evident and clear of itself, forcing, by its own evidence and clearness, the well disposed understanding to assent, irresistibly moving the same thereunto, even as the common principle of natural truths move and incline the mind to natural assent." "We judge not," observed William Penn, "by the sight of the eye or after the hearing of the ear, but according to the light and sense this blessed principle gave us. For being questioned by it in our inward man, we could easily discern the differences of things and feel what was fit and what was not fit in regard to religious and civil concerns."

As this light illuminates every soul and furnishes to each a constant standard of truth and an unerring guide to duty, the only rightful appeal from error in moral sentiment or conduct, religious faith and duty, is to this light. In it all men are equal, and all men are brethren. It constitutes a symbol of universal liberty, and a bond of universal brotherhood. Those therefore who sincerely believe in it can consistently claim no domination over conscience, or exercise coercion in matters of faith. They can wield no tyranny; they can use no violence even for the extirpation of civil evils.

Hence it happened that the Friends, who arose in an age when persecution for opinion's sake was practiced by bigoted Catholics and Protestant Reformers alike, proclaimed liberty of conscience as a sacred right, and pleaded for the religious enfranchisement of all men, even of those who when in power had been the most cruel persecutors. They preached in the ears of tyrants the supremacy of the divine law over all institutions of human contrivance, and qualified their loyalty to their King, by their duty to God. They denounced cruelty in every form, and admitted no plea in its justification or excuse. They repudiated traditionary theology; they denied the authority of church councils, of convocations of priests, senates, and Kings, in all matters of conscience. They asserted the prerogative of reason, and emancipating mind from hierarchical and secular domination, left it free for the development of its powers, restored it to a sense of its dignity and value, and thus enabled it to clear, at a bound, the most formidable obstructions with which superstition and tyranny had blocked up the way of its progress.

Quakerism confides in this principle of the inner light, as did the apostles and primitive Christians, and submits implicitly to its guidance. It thus becomes the restorer of Christianity in its original form, and the most potent civilizer of the human race. It adheres sternly to the right, and makes no compromise with injustice. It adopts Christianity as a rule of civil conduct wherever it will apply. It treats society as a moral agent, and denies it the power of doing, from expediency or seeming necessity, what morality would condemn in a single member. Its moral code wages eternal war with every form of evil that afflicts society. Wherever its influence predominates, war, slavery and intemperance disappear, no pauper semi-barbarous class is created by unequal laws, the rigor of the penal sanctions is relaxed, crime is extirpated without the destruction of the criminal, ambition forgets its delusive aspirations and renounces its selfish projects of aggrandizement, and reform and revolution advance with patient and peaceful steps by avenues opened by enlightened opinion and public intelligence.

This is the Quakerism to which our forefathers were converts, and which they taught to their children, and the influence of which has largely affected the lives and characters of their descendants. That it may continue to do so, through future generations, is a consummation devoutly to be wished, both for their temporal welfare and ultimate happiness.

SONNET.

WRITTEN FOR THE SESQUI-CENTENNIAL GATHERING HELD AT WEST GROVE, CHESTER COUNTY, PA., AUGUST 25, 1875.

Home of the race of our ancestral sires !
Meek-hearted William, James and gentle John,
Of the first Isaac, and the later one
With whom, alas, their right in thee expires.
The heart grown fond at thy decay inquires
How it went with thee in the days long gone ?
What story lives within these ivied stone
Of lives that grew beside thy household fires ?
What happy chance the dream-led Isaac drew
To this fair seat beyond the Western main,
That he might build, and better than he knew—
A lineage here. And hearts—yearn not a few
At thought of thee, last William ! May the train
Of coming generations such renew.

JOHN B. PHILLIPS.

ADDRESS BY JOHN G. JACKSON.

---

On attempting to make some remarks applicable to this very interesting occasion, I confess to a feeling of anxiety in the effort to produce anything pleasing to the variety of minds present here to-day.

Can we not however unite, one and all, in finding cause for gratulation and enjoyment in recalling the events of the past, and according to each individual habit of thought, extracting food suitable for profitable and pleasurable contemplation.

Our worthy progenitor, Isaac Jackson, the elder, whose notable advent with his family into this beautiful part of Pennsylvania, one hundred and fifty years ago, we this day join in celebrating, was a member of the Society of Friends, called Quakers, and such his descendants have largely been.

Doubtless there are however of these descendants here present, who, like some of the children of William Penn, have found the road he traveled too narrow for their chariot wheels; or who, through divers influences, have, to change the metaphor, launched their barks upon a broader sea of life in the great world; broader, but perhaps, less safe from storms than the placid waters upon which our fathers sailed, yet hopefully leading, we trust, to the same ultimate haven of harmonious and happy life. We can speak frankly and with full hearts to all here assembled, saying, "Welcome! Welcome all to this grand re-union of the descendants of worthy men and women:" Let us come together remembering no sectarian exclusiveness of thought; but as a branch, and a notable branch, of the great family of man; candidates for all the endowments vouchsafed from the infinite Father, and covering all minor differences of opinion with the broadest mantle of charity and kindness. We will even be pardonable, on an occasion like the present, should we magnify the virtues of our ancestors, overlooking that share of weakness and imperfection, which as struggling mortals they doubtless showed. Our feeling is mainly to note their worthiness, not to seek out their short-comings.

It would appear that not alone as Quakers were the ancestors of the Jacksons noted as representative men of strong religious convictions and firm individuality and independence of character. I have long been of opinion, that the Jacksons as a clan were composed of men and women apt to do their own thinking—poor stuff out of which to make sycophants or hypocrites,—hard to drive against their consciences, firm of purpose, and persistent in effort.

The martyr blood of Ralph Jackson, burned at the stake in the reign of Queen Mary, (Sixth month, 27, 1556,) and the boldness with which John Jackson, another dissenter, about the same era, withstood priestly dictation in matters of religious faith, fully indicate the spirit of our remote ancestors.

Even the armorial bearing of the ancient feudal Jacksons, when warlike qualities were at a premium, "The greyhounds and the dolphin," "swiftness by land and sea," was no mean device, as indicating their standing before kings and princes.

Allusions to these interesting points we have already had in the complete historical sketch just read by our learned friend, Joseph J. Lewis, a worthy scion of the ancestral tree.

One important fact is quite observable, how well our forefathers and foremothers obeyed the scripture injunction, "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth." Eight and ten children to a family, seem to have been quite common amongst them, while the numbers of twelve, thirteen, and even fifteen, have in some cases been reached.

This is certainly one of the best ways of accounting for the largeness of the tribe, and the number in attendance here to day. The same ever recurring, ever new tale of youthful love was true then as now; and then, as now, its course did not always run "smooth."

It is stated that one of our worldly-wise ancestral Millers, kept a young Jackson waiting a dreary long while for his daughter. Old friend Miller thought the young suitor insufficiently "well to do" in this world's goods, to take upon himself the responsibilities of a family. All-conquering love, however, as is generally the case, in due time won, and the happy pair formed a union from which have sprung some of us now present.

[The speaker here introduced the marriage certificate of Isaac and Ann Jackson, with some remarks thereon; and followed it by a recital of the "dream" related in the preceding address, afterward continuing as follows:]

I would be glad, if time permitted, to add in this connection, a small tribute to the memory of John Jackson, grandson of Isaac, our dreamer just alluded to, and the originator of this beautiful grove and garden, the grandfather also of our kind hostess, to whose efforts, and those of her family, we are so large indebted for this re-union to-day. Contemporary with Bartram and Marshall, who have themselves left record of the excellence and amiability of his character, he evinced the purity of his tastes in adopting, like them, those pursuits fitting only for such minds as find enjoyment in the study of nature, and in observing and cultivating arborescent and floral beauties. As an instance of his mild and benevolent methods of rebuke, and of his ready and pleasant wit, I ask leave to read you from some old cards that he attached to his favorite aloes. It was too much the custom then as now, thoughtlessly, to scratch names upon their smooth leaves. Who can help admiring the quaint idea of thus having the plants fitly speak for themselves. Attached to the large Aloe, he had :

"Ye beaux and belles, I pray, forbear,
My pretty leaves to scratch and tear;
You little think the pain I feel
From puncture of your polished steel."

To this the Golden-edged Aloe replied :

"Ah, sister ! well thou dost complain,
For I have felt the poignant pain
Which—oh forgive me !—almost drives
To curse their needles, pins and knives."

The Prickly Pear then chimes in :

"I hear those rhymers make complaint,
In sober style and verses quaint ;
But, if on me you try your skill,
I'll jag your fingers, that I will."

Amongst the descendants of our notable forefather, the elder Isaac, both in the name of Jackson and also in other names connected by marriage with the family tree, have been and still are many note-worthy personages, to whom allusion would be most proper did time permit. We might discourse of William, the son of Isaac, known by the sobriquet of "honest William Jackson," not that it was rare to find an honest Jackson, as some facetious ones have suggested, but because of his undoubted and country-wide reputation for unswerving integrity. Isaac, the clock-maker, son of this "honest William," has given to many of us special cause to recall his memory. One of the earliest recollections of my own childhood, and doubtless also of others present, is the old family clock. An early reading lesson was from its dial plate, "Isaac Jackson, New Garden," and on lesser disks, as allowable ornament to the four corners of its face we read, ("Time") ("Passeth") ("Swiftly") ("Away.") We have the old clock still at the head of our hall stairs, as a valued family piece, doing its duty steadily and well.

You have all seen them! There they stand, like the Jacksons of old, perpendicular and plain and tall; or like sentinels between time and eternity, "ting-tong," "ting-tong," slowly dropping the moments of time—dropping them from the eternity of the future through the gossamer-vanishing veil of the present, into the limitless past.

The Jacksons have also been a preaching generation, as instance the noted William, son of the "honest William," whom many of you will remember, and whose travels in the ministry, both in England and the United States, are matters of memorial record. We might go on to relate, where this preaching mantle, still descending from generation to generation, has fallen notably upon many of the tribe.

Another William [The speaker here turned to the picture of William Jackson, hanging at the back of the stand, and read the lines by C. C. Burleigh, attached to it.] whom we remember still more nearly, and whose beautiful ancestral home we are now enjoying, ought to claim from us large and loving notice.

As a thinker, writer and legislator, his memory demands our most earnest respect, to say nothing of those nearer and dearer ties of parentage and near kinship, with which some here to-day regard and reverence him.

Time, friends, will scarce allow of a further enumeration; but, in a general sense, where can we find a family (and I say it with pride, even a modest pride,) which for generation after generation, has produced so many solid, substantial, enlightened men and women, active and useful in their day and generation?

Having thus hastily reviewed the characters of our worthy progenitors, will it not be appropriate for us to reflect how far we may reap profit from their example, how far in the light of one and a half centuries added to the world's experience, and to the needs of man, we may wisely imitate the simplicity of their lives?

Admitting that that the Quaker Society originated in a fanatical and puritanical age, and that true wisdom may not now teach us to darken our horizons by some of the asceticisms into which our forefathers were, perhaps, too much led, yet, is it not easy to perceive that most of the troubles and difficulties that press so heavily upon the race, or now embarrass and afflict our beloved land, are mainly occasioned by the lack amongst the people of that simplicity, integrity, and temperance of life, of which our ancestors were such marked exemplars.

Had all of our countrymen even approached to their standard of justice and right, our terrible rebellion, the consequences of which we are still enduring, would not have been needed for the purging of a great national evil; and if our people, as a whole, could more nearly emulate their simple economy and thrift, how much sooner could we as a nation overcome and outgrow these entailed troubles and perplexities.

[He closed his remarks by reciting the appropriate poem of John G. Whittier, "The Quaker of the Olden Time."]

HARMONY GROVE, SIXTY YEARS AGO.

READ BY SARAH PUGH.

---

Where London Grove attracts the eye
With hills aspiring to the sky,
And meads forever green,
Prolific fields, luxuriant woods,
Enameled lawns and lucid floods,
Is found this lovely scene.

With spacious front and modest pride
On a bold hill's descending side
Full to meridian day,
A mansion rears its stately head,
Which trees majestic overspread,
Soft'ning the torrid ray.

Round its strong walls in countless lines
A numerous family of vines
In wild luxuriance creep,
Or bend their devious course aloof,
There from the chimneys and the roof
Gaze o'er the frowning steep.

Here in a parlor neat and large,
With many a classic volume charged,
A library meets the view ;
To aid the scientific mind,
Or those to harmless mirth inclined,
And pleasures ever new.

Within these walls kind plenty stands,
And scatters gifts with liberal hands
To objects of her care ;
While pure affection, prompt to please,
Hangs o'er the couch of fell disease,
Or breaks his fatal snare.

The reverend mother's evening days,
Illumed by Hope's reviving rays,
Unconscious glide along ;
How strong the Gospel's lenient balm,
The turgid storms of life to calm,
And raise the sacred song.

In front of this is widely spread,
With easy slope a fertile mead
Fair to the mid-day beam,
Which Flora's showy robe bedecks,
And blushing flowers incline their necks
To sip the lucid stream.

A stream which now in surly mood
Foams o'er the rocks in yonder wood
Where hills abruptly rise ;
Now with a gentle current moves,
Gives music to the neighboring groves,
And mirror to the skies.

Close on the left an orchard stands,
Where fruits from this and foreign lands,
Delicious sweets unfold ;
The juicy apple, pear, and peach,
Wide o'er the rest their sceptres reach
And nod their crowns of gold.

Near on the right a garden lies,
Basking beneath auspicious skies
Where balmy zephyrs play ;
O'er these no daring Eurus flings
Frost, hail, or snow from gelid wings
To blast the charms of May.

There stately trees on high aspire,
Intent from Sol's meridian fire
To shield the plants below ;
Here others ope romantic glades,
Or wreathe their arms to form arcades
In many a circling row.

When drawn from far by beauties rare,
The sons of science here repair
These velvet walks to tread,
Each plant, to greet its classic friends,
With modest grace its arms extends
And bows its blooming head.

When Taurus lends his genial power
To waken every vital flower
On Flora's roseate bed,
Here, roused from long-enjoyed repose,
A thousand plants their sweets disclose,
A thousand beauties spread.

Culled from each region of the globe,
Where Flora's variegated robe
Is spread to mortal view,
They lift their heads, extend their arms,
Evolve a host of nameless charms,
As exquisite as new.

A ceaseless fount, in prospect clear,
Collects its healthy waters here,
To form a mimic lake,
Where virgin plants delight to lave,
Or stooping low to kiss the wave
The secret treasure take.

In whose true mirror one may see
Each humble weed and stately tree,
In just resemblance pass ;
So conscience, to her duty true,
Holds to each mortal's mental view
An undeceptive glass.

Not far from this a spacious bower,
Enclosed with many a fragrant flower,
Adorns a lonely grove ;
Where lyric songsters blithely play,
From early morn to latest day,
Their melting tales of love.

A breeze which unremitted springs
From western climes on roseate wings,
The inmost seats assails,
Waves high in air the fragrant plumes,
With which the bower profusely blooms,
And scents the passing gales.

In this, still ready at command,
A desk, pen, ink and paper stand
For such as choose to write
Some brief encomiums on the place,
Its use, convenience, order, grace
That yields the most delight.

Short extracts here confus'dly lie
Names, dates, and ditties, catch the eye,
In uncouth manner penn'd;
A pithy phrase, a sentence strong,
A billet doux, a mournful song,
A farewell to a friend.

* * * *

An aged sire with ceaseless care
This paradise of all that's rare
With gentle sceptre sways ;
This order with just taste he plans,
And labors with assiduous hands,
Each infant plant to raise.

Farewell ! abode of Peace and Love,
And if the Power that rules above
Would grant one rash request,
Be mine in such a rest as this
To spend the eve of life in bliss,
And sink unknown to rest.

ADDRESS BY MARGARETTA JACKSON.

KENNET SQUARE, CHESTER CO., PA.

With reverence for the past and joy in the present, we meet beneath this spreading roof of green to commemorate an event of no great import, perhaps, to the rest of the world, but certainly of significance to us. Near this spot, one hundred and fifty years ago, the Jackson family, somewhat smaller than it now is, gathered beneath a narrower roof, with uplifted hearts thanking God who had led them by a vision to this place of peaceful labor. After the lapse of a century and a half, we renew those unvoiced hymns of thankfulness to the good Providence who has permitted us, the scattered descendants of that little family, to meet upon this consecrated ground.

To-day, we are brought together by the simple claim of kinship, strangers many, but cousins all.

Family gatherings are not of recent origin, indeed, they have the claim of the greatest antiquity in their favor. In the morning twilight of history, when the years of men were not so few as now, we read of the patriarch and his descendants for many generations gathering together beneath the broad blue tent, for mutual support and defence; later, the cry of the clansman, rushing to the support of his kindred chieftain, was wont to strike terror to the heart of the boldest enemy: and, through all the ruder periods of history, we learn that family pride and fealty have been among the strongest preservative forces of society. It is true, that this noble root has sometimes supported a growth of aristocratic privilege, hurtful to progress, and of ill odor in our democratic nostrils. But in this country, neither law nor custom favors the growth of family power or exclusiveness: rather, we tend to disintegrate; changeful as the waves of the sea, we wander where interest or fancy may lead; strong in our individuality, and too often encased in an armor of selfish reserve. The restless murmur of life, where it pulses at fever heat, lures our boys from the quiet fields; or the unknown possibilities of the far West, draw them with relentless attraction, and the old home passes into the hands of strangers.

That this place should have remained in the possession of the descendants of Isaac Jackson for five generations, is an evidence of the successful thrift and strong home attachments of those who have dwelt here. We learn of them, that they were men of the most careful sense of justice, gentle-mannered, fond of information, curious in the study of plants, and devoted to their culture. To this home, then, where have been nurtured the tastes that we would all do well to cultivate, it is peculiarly fitting that we should come as pilgrims, to lay our offerings upon the shrine of family love, and to build, if we will, an altar to family pride—the pride of noble nature and not of noble name.

I am proud to say that our ancestors, of whom we are permitted to know something, through many generations, seem to have belonged to that middle class of society which has given birth to the best thought and the highest achievement. They were not burdened with a plethora of this world's goods; early and late they made acquaintance with the "fire-proof joys" that earnest work bestows. The "Good Goddess of Poverty" showered her blessings upon them, giving them strong bodies and alert minds.

The earlier records given in that valuable family history that some of us have had the privilege of seeing, seem to leave much room for the exercise of the imagination. We can imagine, if you please, the gallant achievements by land and sea, that gained for our misty ancestor his knightly spurs and heraldic device. A knight he was, I ween, of grave mien and earnest bearing, not given to idle jests, or to touching the light guitar beneath his lady's lattice; fit ancestor to the martyr, Ralph Jackson, whose aureole of flame seems to me a prouder claim to distinction than knightly spurs, however won; fit ancestor to the heretical John Jackson, whose intrepid spirit and ready wit are shown in his recorded replies to his priestly questioner; fit ancestor, also, to that long line of Quaker descendants, whose broad brims and thee's and thou's gave such offence to their persecutors.

Carlyle says, in his Sartor Resartus, with that grim humor that sometimes masks his profoundest thought, "The greatest event of modern times was the making for himself a pair of leather breeches by George Fox." Carlyle, perhaps, saw as the result of this act, the end of slave labor, the elevation of woman, prisons changed from places of punishment to schools of reform; perhaps, with prophetic vision, he saw that millennial fulfilment, the universal reign of peace. How much the world owes to the "sublime madness" of George Fox, has yet to be told; but even the most scornful decrrier of Quakerism cannot deny, that in every humanitarian reform they have, at least, put in the entering wedge. To-day we are not specially interested in the debt the world owes to the Religion of the Inward Light, but in our peculiar obligation to it.

As we have been told, our ancestors were among its earliest converts. Driven by persecution from England to Ireland, they found, at last, in this peaceful valley, the room to work and worship they had so long and so vainly sought.

We know something of their lives here in the wilderness; of their steadfast labor and serene hopefulness; of their meetings, when both silence and words were overflowed by the Spirit; of their decorous weddings and quiet funerals; of all these, the record gives us some account. But of their more intimate domestic life, we would gladly learn something too; and here are some friends who have kindly consented to lay aside their garb of invisibility, to mingle with us to-day; perhaps they will answer our questions.*

Dear Grand-dame, seven times great, we would gladly question thee of those good old times of which we love to read and think; they come to us bathed in a light of poetical and sacred association, and while we have read of your patience under great affliction, we can scarcely think that just such little troubles and worries as mar the serenity of our days could have had existence then. Did children fret in those days, and husbands sometimes grow impatient? Did the daughter wilfully desire a broader hem, or a brighter ribbon, than was deemed consistent with Quaker testimonies to give? Did rebellious stirrings sometimes trouble the heart of the young man, that only a mother's gentleness could soothe away?

And thou, gentle maiden, whose freshness the centuries have left untouched, what thoughts filled thy mind, as, sitting by thy loom, thou didst weave the household gear? No song came from thy lips, but did the old, old story form itself in cadences in thy heart; and did the thread sometimes break as the thought of Israel's grave "good night" came back to thee?

*Alluding to the two feminine representatives of the old Jacksons, then present.

What think you of these brave days of ours? We boast that we have made some progress; we have invented some good machines since your day, some secrets of nature we have learned, some mighty forces have become our servants; but in the good old-fashioned virtues of patient waiting, labor and frugality, we have need, I fear, to go back and learn of you.

Spirit of our ancestor Isaac, I trust thou, too, art with us to-day, and from thy higher place of vision thou lookest with pleasure upon this valley of thy dream, with its finely cultivated fields, its homes, the abodes of intelligence and refinement; its gardens, not only delighting our eyes, but sending their fragrance abroad over the land and even to the isles of the sea; for what place so remote that the fame of the West Grove Nurseries has not reached it, and on what soil have their nurslings failed to take root?

* * * * *

And wilt thou not let thy blessing fall upon us, thy descendants, upon these sweet-faced children, with whom the business of life is still to be happy; upon these youths and maidens who have not passed the blessed land of reverie and dream; upon us, who have ceased to dream, but scarcely learned to live, and upon these dear friends, whose happy faces teach us not to dread the coming of old age.

* * * * *

And may we be worthy of our heritage, and while we accept the opportunities for broader culture that this age affords, let us emulate the perfect integrity, the unfeigned humility and greatness of soul, that distinguished our line in days gone by.

ABRAM AND ISAAC.

BY HENRY PETERSON—PHILADELPHIA.

The Lord said unto Abram,
The Hebrew records say,
From Ur of the Chaldeans,
Now get thee forth this day—
Out from thy father's kindred,
And from thy father's land,
And journey into Canaan,
With thy own household band.
And thou shalt be a nation,
And I will bless thy vine,
And east and west, and north and south,
Fair Canaan shall be thine.

The Lord said unto Isaac,
The Quaker records say,
From Ireland of the English.
Now get thee forth this day.
There is a Western valley,
And a fountain flowing there,
Where thou shalt lead thy household
And pitch thy altar fair.
And thou shalt be a people,
Led by my light divine.
And east and west, and north and south,
The pastures shall be thine.

So Isaac left his kindred,
With Abram's trust of yore,
And journey'd o'er the waters,
To the far Western shore.
With faith that knew no doubting,
He saw as sure the way.
As Israel saw the pillared fire,
And pillar of cloud by day.

And there the seed of Isaac
 Fast multiplied and throve,
 Glad dwellers in the happy vales
 Of peaceful Londongrove—
 A people just, God-fearing,
 True sons of truthful Penn,
 Who prove they love the Father,
 By love of fellow-men.

Oh, Abram's faith and Isaac's,
 To us may it be given,
 So many things are hard to solve
 This side the gates of Heaven—
 And may it lead us onward,
 To brighter lands unseen,
 More perfect than sweet Canaan,
 Or Chester's vales of green !

HARMONY GROVE.

THE RESIDENCE OF ISAAC JACKSON, WHO CAME FROM IRELAND IN 1725.

BY CHANDLER DARLINGTON.

The hill and the valley and beautiful spring,
 Where a pilgrim who over the ocean had come,
 Forsaking his kindred, his country and king,
 With a dream for his guidance, selected a home.

Of the future, bright pictures in fancy he drew,
 Obeyed his impressions as sacred commands,
 The deer and the Red man receded from view,
 As the forest gave way to the work of his hands.

Simple and rude was the dwelling he raised
 In the bright land of promise to which he had come;
 With a feeling of pride o'er his acres he gazed,
 And the prattle of children made joyous his home.

Impressed with the duty of being employed,
With hands that were able and willing to toil,
In rural seclusion he lived and enjoyed
A sustenance drawn from a bountiful soil.

Blest as he was in his basket and store,
With the fruit of his labor to use and to lend,
In time there was added the one blessing more—
The social enjoyment of neighbor and friend.

Then, a bridle-path led to the rural abode
Where were welcomed alike both the rich and the poor;
Now, the burdens of commerce come load after load,
With the "Iron Horse" rumbling almost to the door.

Where the father the forest of nature assailed,
The children successive their labors bestow;
Where the wild-rose and bramble aforetime prevailed,
The choicest of flowers luxuriantly grow.

Nor less was the culture applied to the mind,
Developing friendship, refinement and love;
Hence to its history appended we find
The appropriate title of Harmony Grove.

HARMONY GROVE.

BY SARAH W. PETERSON, PHILADELPHIA.

---

A pilgrim from the old world wondering stands,
Still as if carved in stone, with folded hands,—
The loveliest of valleys showering sweet
Its virgin wealth of beauty at his feet;
His soul is in his eyes, that deep and clear
Burn with the inward flaming of the seer.
"It is the spot!" he cries in sudden awe,
"The very spot my trance d spirit saw,
Like regions of the Blessed for delight,—
That vision in the watches of the night,

Clear-shining, to the inner sight revealed
True light for guidance, graciously unsealed.
Behold the hill ! even so I saw it rise
From the green valley toward the arching skies,
Studded with great primeval trees that stand
Like sentinels to guard the smiling land,
And at its base the spring that bubbles cool
Through glistening sands into the rocky pool,
With soft continuous murmur. At the sound
Of that upspringing fount my pulses bound !
The very sound that in my dream I heard,
Plainer and sweeter than the song of bird
Trilling its idle love-lay overhead;
For this of daily blessing, daily bread
Its glad assurance is forever giving:
Domestic ease and joy are in its living
And sparkling freshness. Beautiful spring, I come !
Thy voice of welcome to this western home
Thrills and composes like a restful word
Telling the loving kindness of the Lord.
Here will I build my cot. The hand Divine
Has marked this lovely place for me and mine,
And for a token between Him and me,
It shall be called the Vale of Harmony."

Thus struck the peaceful key-note of the place
This founder of the peaceful Jackson race.
Each busy year its own fair record kept,
And calmly with his fathers Isaac slept.
But still in faithful hands the beauty grows,
The wilderness is blooming like the rose;
And William stil! as in his father's life
Lives on serene, with Katharine his wife,
And sons and daughters in those fruitful bowers,
Grow with the trees, and blossom with the flowers.

Among the troop I see one dreaming child,
Like the beloved disciple good and mild,—
A beauty-loving, clear-eyed, thoughtful boy,
To whom the Garden is a passionate joy,
And the sweet gardening labor pure delight,
As Adam found it in his Eden bright.
So, year by year the fair creation grows,
The enthusiast o'er his purpose broods and glows,
As tree and flower from far off foreign lands
Unfold their graces 'neath his fostering hands;

Through nature's floral wealth his fancy roams,
 Revels in dreams of England's garden homes,
 And to the music of grand Milton's tone
 He plans and plants an Eden of his own.

Here, fairest home in all the country round,
 The bride was brought when John his Mary found,
 And worthy offspring blest their faithful love;—
 Through spicy groves the frolic children rove,
 Make larkspur rings and chains of scarlet seeds,
 Or string the stony Job's-tears' smooth gray beads;
 Then watch the darting minnows in the pond,
 And chase each other up the slope beyond;
 Mimic the cat-bird and the mournful dove,
 And list the choir full sounding through the grove;
 In the great box-bush play at hide and seek,
 While the broad walk re-echoes shout and shriek,
 And cloistral avenues of pines and firs
 The music of their childish laughter stirs.
 Thus passed my mother's early, happy years;
 Youngest of seven, the baby claim endears
 To each and all the tender, youngest flower,
 Though womanhood steals on with gracious dower
 Of gifts for heart and mind, for form and face;—
 A charming presence in the dear old place,
 With soft brown eyes, and cheeks like roses sweet,
 All lovely things the maiden Catharine greet.

Another William rules the ancestral Grove,
 And other children, offspring of his love,
 Sport in the bowers and pull the blossoms gay,
 And follow butterflies the long, bright day,
 To the tall pine-tree hurry from the sun,
 And build a mossy bridge across the run,
 Seek the green shades that labyrinthine wind,
 And, nimble-footed, scale the hill behind.

Oh, day of days, when to my childish eyes
 The gates unclosed of this, my paradise!
 Whose hospitable door and low porch gleam
 Like the House Beautiful of Christian's dream.
 Oh, dewy summer mornings, rare and sweet,
 That lured away from sleep my eager feet,
 Out to that garden of enchantment drawn,
 In the dim quiet of the early dawn,—
 Beautiful all and fragrant—naught awake

But jubilant birds in every bush and brake—
Under the trellised arch of woodbine stealing,
As into something longed-for past revealing,
Fruition of some coveted delight—
Past the rich flower-beds, sparkling dewy bright,
Down to the spring, the pond, where centred fair
The garden's sweetness and its beauty rare;
For there the tropic treasures ranged around
The gleaming water made it fairy ground.
There stood the Lemon, golden-fruited, there
The Myrtle breathed abroad Italian air,
The Cactus blossomed, flaming like the sun,
And frail Mimosa, at a touch undone;—
But oh the sweetness of that Jasmine tree,
The rare magnificence it was to me !
Superb and stately, peerless August queen,
Its great white blossoms set in glossy green,
Like cups of incense, heavy with perfume
And luscious summer wealth of creamy bloom !
And those musk roses ! like remembered singing
Their odor o'er my ravished spirit winging,
Calls up the old stone green-house, ivy-grown,
And clustered o'er with roses newly blown,
Just tinted like the dawn, each dainty spray
In full relief upon its walls of gray,—
Always their scent delicious brings to me
From the far morning-land this memory.

Isaac the seer began the Jackson sway,
With Isaac Jackson passed the name away,
For he died young; and to the daughter's line
Has lapsed the old estate, roof-tree and vine.
Long may they live ! Mary, our hostess honored,
And the Grove's happy owner, Everard Conard;
And children follow in the good old way,—
So pray the guests at the old Grove to-day.

August 25th, 1875.

ADDRESS BY CHARLES C. BURLEIGH.*

---

I am glad to be with you here to-day, to join in the gratulations and rejoicings for which the occasion calls, and to share in the honest pride with which you cherish the memory of your worthy ancestors. It is true I do not bear the Jackson name, nor feel the Jackson blood flowing in my veins; yet my right is no less than that of any here, to stand on this platform, to mingle in these festivities, and to be modestly proud of the worth of those you have met to honor. For you, who are of the Jackson blood, are so by no choice of yours, you could not help it if you would; but my connection with the family is my own voluntary act. And you may be well assured it is an act for which I never felt regret, an act which I regard as among the happiest events of my life. So I count myself as one of you, with a right as full and perfect in the pleasant memories and observances of the occasion, as can be claimed by any of you all.

Something has been said here about the origin of the Jackson race, and we have been shown that it goes back to an antiquity so remote as to outreach the pen of history. No man can say when or where the Jacksons began to be. But students of the science of language tell us that often, from the very forms of words, important facts may be inferred with a certainty as complete as if authentic history had recorded them. Upon this hint proceeding, we may safely say that the founder of the Jackson house was a man of signal popularity, his name familiar to the general ear and tongue; well known and well received among the multitude;—none of your reserved aristocrats, self-withdrawn from fellowship with the common people. His name was so familiar to men's thoughts and lips, that it fell into a form of homely abbreviation. As generally spoken it had ceased to be grave John, or dignified Johanan, or whatsoever would have been its shape in the more solemn dialect of his time and country, and had passed into plain, unceremonious Jack; the kindly freedom of address thus marking him a popular favorite.

Jack, then, he was; and he had a son—Jack's son, of course—from whom the Jackson lineage and name. Who was this primal Jack, is lost in the darkness of the distant past. That it was Jack the Giant-killer, we cannot positively affirm on grounds of clear, historic proof; but that it was, is strongly probable from qualities apparent in the race even to this day. At least, those members of it whom I have known have battled sturdily with the grim and mandevouring giants of our land and age, Intemperance and Slavery; and the vigorous strokes which they have dealt at these huge monsters, show something very like the impulse of ancestral blood behind each manly blow. We may with reason, therefore, venture to believe that they are the off-spring of the famous Giant-killer; or, if not his veritable children by natural descent of blood, that they are of his spiritual lineage at least, beyond all question.

But, seriously, we have good reason for the feelings which have brought us to this gathering. The sons and daughters of an ancestry like yours, may fitly meet to testify their sense of their forefathers' worth, and indulge in mutual gratulations on their honorable descent. There is a pride of ancestry, if so you choose to call it, which may well be cherished, and in proper ways exhibited. It is well to remember the virtues of our forefathers, to pay a due respect to their unassuming worth, and feel a modest complacency in the thought that our blood is drawn from so good a source. Not that we should indulge that sort of pride which would lead us to value ourselves on the mere fact that we have sprung from ancestors so worthy, while showing in our own characters no likeness to what we celebrate in theirs, and using no endeavors to make their virtues ours; a pride like that of the vain boaster in the story we have heard, to whose loud vaunts of noble ancestry it was well replied that he was like a potato-plant; all of him worth anything was under ground. Not that we should cherish a pride of that sort which seems to imagine that the righteousness of our forefathers is to be "imputed" to ourselves, to cover out of sight the "filthy rags" of our own false righteousness. But rather should our pride of ancestry be such as shall impel us, while we remember and revere in our ancestors what is worthy of remembrance and of reverence, at the same time to emulate what we revere, and strive earnestly to live as becomes the lineage we are proud to claim.

If it is our boast that they were honest and upright, faithful to the call of duty, modest and unpretending, truthful and sincere, in simplicity and singleness of heart doing with diligence the work belonging to their respective stations, whether illustrious or obscure ; then, plainly, it is only when we do our best to reproduce in ourselves these qualities which we commend in them ; to express in our own conduct what we praise with our lips ; that we rightly show a just appreciation of their characters, and a proper pride in our descent from them. As a suggestion of noble endeavor, as an incentive to a worthy life, as an encouragement to personal fidelity and diligence in well-doing, we may wisely rejoice in a lineage like ours ; but to try to make it a substitute for these, is neither to do it honor, nor to derive honor from it. "We honor our ancestors," [pointing to these words, inscribed with evergreens, over the platform,] not by speaking their praises in however well-chosen words, or by boasting however loudly of their blood in our veins ; but by showing in our lives that the qualities which we inherit from them are such as do honor to those who left us the inheritance. Be it our aim, then, to render this honor to the ancestry from which we deem it an honor to be able to claim descent.

The time which we can spend together here is nearly past, and we shall soon disperse from this, our pleasant festive gathering. And I trust that we shall carry from it something more than the memory of the pleasure we have here enjoyed ; that we shall have somewhat bettered our acquaintance with each other, and thereby gained somewhat in mutual esteem and kind regard ; that we shall have felt ourselves drawn nearer to each other in the bonds of kindred ; quickened and deepened in some degree our sense of brotherhood ; and added something to that culture of the social feelings and kind affections which gives to life so large a measure of its sweetest joys and most refined delights. With this as one result of our assembling, we shall indeed have made it not unworthy of its occasion ; and not in vain shall we have gathered here to render honor to our ancestors.

RICHARD AND ANTHONY JACKSON.

As relates to the birth and parentage of Richard and Anthony Jackson, there appears to be no record extant; and the earliest information concerning them has reference to their removal from Lancashire, England, to Ireland, in 1649. That they were brothers, and Richard was the elder, we infer from the information derived from a genealogical record compiled with care by Thomas Greer, Jr., of Ireland, in 1824, and taken by him from ancient and authentic documents. Whether they left England with the view of better prospects for business, or impelled by such considerations as might have induced them to conclude they could enjoy more fully the privilege of religious and civil liberty, we are not informed; but most likely the motive was on account of business, as Richard was at that time a soldier in the Parliamentary army, in which he continued for several years after their removal to Ireland. Locating first in Lurgan, it was here they became associated in religious fellowship with William Edmundson, who, in 1653, had become a convert to the doctrines of the Quakers and afterwards an eminent minister among them.

William Edmundson appears to have been the first of this people who came into Ireland, and in 1654, he was instrumental in establishing a religious meeting held at his own house with six others, the first Friends' Meeting settled in Ireland, Richard and Anthony being of the number composing it. In 1655, William Edmundson removed to the County of Cavan and (in his own words) "purchased several parcels of land for ourselves and several other families of Friends that would live near us," and further adds "whereupon several families came with us and settled in this land," and a Meeting was soon established among them. *Rutty, referring to this circumstance, says: "William Edmundson, Richard Jackson, Anthony Jackson, John Thompson, Richard Fayle, John Edmundson, William Moon and their families removed and took land in the County of Cavan and dwelt there, and settled a meeting in that County." It is further stated that, in 1659, several of the Friends above mentioned "by reason of their landlords not performing covenant with them removed from the County of Cavan and settled in and about Mountmellick," Richard Jackson being of the number. Richard is frequently spoken of in the early records of the Society of Friends, as a sufferer with William Edmundson, by distrains and imprisonments, for holding meetings. Anthony continued to reside in the neighborhood of Cavan and Oldeastle, and in 1670, on the authority of Besse, he suffered imprisonment for tythes;—also in the return of "Sufferings" from the County of Cavan for 1681, and frequently prior to that period, mention is made that he was committed to prison on account of his religious principles.

The minutes of Mountmellick Meeting furnish items of interest concerning Richard Jackson and his family; and it is therein recorded that he was born at Eccleston, in Lancashire, England—removed to Ireland in 1648, and "took to wife Margaret Keete, at Carrickfergus, County of Antrim, in the year 1650. She was born at Maulberry, (Marlborough,) in Wiltshire, England."

The following testimony concerning Richard Jackson, given by William Edmundson, was taken from the Records of Mountmellick Meeting.

\" The Seventh of ye Second month, 1679.*

Richard Jackson, deceased in Mountmellick, in the parish of Rosenallis and Queen's County. He was born in Lancashire, and was a soldier in the army of England and Ireland some years. He was convinced of God's everlasting Truth about the year 1654, since which time he walked in the Truth, and with the Lord's people, bearing his share of suffering as it came, whether spoyle of goods or imprisonment of body, for the Testimony of the blessed Truth which he had received of the Lord, and in which he believed. He was a serviceable man in the Creation, and more especially in the Truth—in his place he was ready to serve Truth in what he might, and I doe not know that he ever was tainted, or sided with false spirits, but always that I know of stuck close to the Elders and Brethren in the Truth, whose spirits had been well tried, and found sound to God-ward; and the company of such was Delightsome to him, but false spirits and hypocrites he had a perfect antipathy against, and though he seemed sometimes to some to be somewhat of a rude speech, yet in the ground of Truth he was sound, as its well known to such as knew him aright, —and he was ready to serve Truth in public service, soe in collections ready to minister above his equals, and to provoke and stir up others to that good work, and his heart and door was open to receive such as truly feared and served the Lord; and though he could not well bend, nor comply with such as sought themselves more than the Lord's honour, yet he would easily yield and comply with such as was of a sound mind and a right spirit in all matters controverted on the public account. A little before his departure I came to see him, with several other friends. He asked to be helped up on his pillow, and something to drink, which was done; after which he discoursed with me of settling his outward estate;—and in a little time I asked how it was with him to God-ward. He answered it was very well, and said he had nothing on his conscience that troubled him, and he was as willing to dye as to live—and after a little time he passed away as if he had fallen asleep. He died in the fifty-fourth year of his life, and his body burried by his relatives and friends in the burying place of the people called Quakers upon the land of Tineal, near Rosenallis—where his body lies and is at rest from its toyles; and I do not doubt but his soul is in peace and his spirit at rest with God that gave it. He is gone to his rest and his works follow him. His memoriall will not die with us that is left behind, who are members with him of that spirituall body of which Christ Jesus is the Head; into which the Lord in his spirit united us, and joynd us together in a spirituall fellowship, in which we feel the want of him in his outward tabernacle:—but the will of God be done, believing He will raise up others to supply his service in the body.”

Richard Jackson being in the fifty-fourth year of his age at the time of his death, the year of his birth is fixed in or near 1626; but concerning his brother Anthony Jackson there appears to have been no family record preserved, neither have we any account from the Minutes (if such were kept) of Old-castle Meeting, within the limits of which he resided, to supply us with information with regard to his marriage or his family, other than the isolated fact that he had a son Isaac, the date of whose birth is not given, but its occurrence in 1665 inferred from the circumstance that he died in 1750 in the eighty-sixth year of his age. Anthony survived Richard, but we have no account of him on record after his imprisonment, already referred to, in 1681 his death probably occurring prior to 1696, as it will be observed his name does not appear on Isaac's marriage certificate bearing date in that year.

*William Jackson of Philadelphia, during a visit to Ireland in 1870, had access to the old Records of Carlow Monthly Meeting, kept in the archives belonging to Friends, in Dublin, from which the items above given were carefully transcribed.

Isaac and Ann with their surviving children, (excepting Thomas the eldest son, who remained in Ireland,) and Rebecca, who came to America a few years before her parents, immigrated in 1725, previous to which they obtained from Carlow Monthly Meeting the following certificate of removal :

“TO FRIENDS IN THE PROVINCE OF PENNSYLVANIA OR ELSEWHERE.

Dear Friends :—These with our love in the truth, which is one in all nations, do we dearly salute you, hereby letting you know that our friend Isaac Jackson, the bearer of this, sometime since acquainted us with his intention of transporting himself and family into your parts ; which we having maturely considered-of have left him to his own freedom and liberty therein. And he continuing his said intention therein desired a certificate, which we give as follows, viz : Both he and his wife are members of our men’s and women’s meetings for about twenty years past, and their conversation and behavior amongst us and others were orderly and of good report and they go clear from any engagements here as far as we know ; and their two children William Jackson and Mary Jackson have behaved orderly and are clear from any here on account of marriage. So desiring their welfare every way and safe arrival with you, we conclude with our dear love to you, your loving Friends.

Soon after their arrival in America and settlement at London-grove, Chester County, Pennsylvania, Isaac Jackson and family became members of New Garden Monthly Meeting, as appears from the following Minute taken from the Records of that Meeting :

“10mo. 9, 1725, Isaac Jackson produced a certificate to this Meeting from a Monthly Meeting held at Carlow, in the nation of Ireland, in behalf of himself and wife, which was satisfactory, and accepted.”

Isaac died in the autumn of 1750, in the eighty-sixth year of his age ; but the exact time of his wife’s death does not appear to have been recorded. There is however a record that it occurred about six or seven years after their arrival in this country, which would fix the time in 1731 or 1732.

With limited means at command for the occupation of farming, Isaac had devoted much of his time to the weaving business,* and by persevering industry and frugality, succeeded in acquiring such competency as enabled him to maintain a large family in a reputable manner; and his children, although their paternal inheritance was inconsiderable, yet mainly through self-reliant effort and from industrious habits acquired early in life, prospered in business; and by their honesty, sobriety and uprightness, attained respectable positions in the community in which they lived.

3. REBECCA, born 3mo. 25, 1697; married Jeremiah, son of John and Mary Starr, of Oldeastle, in the county of Meath, Ireland, at Ballytore, 11mo. 10, 1716. They removed to America 1717-8, bringing a certificate of membership from Friends of Carlow Monthly Meeting; took up a tract in Londongrove township, Chester County, Pa., and on adjoining land a few years afterwards Rebecca's parents settled. Prior to this time the country was almost an unbroken wilderness, although as early as 1712 some Friends had come over, settled there and established a Friends' Meeting. Among the names of the earlier families we find the Starrs, Millers, Lightfoots, and some bearing the name of Jackson.

There is a tradition that the father of John Starr was a captain of infantry in the Parliament army during the civil war, after which he settled in Ireland, and the son resided for a time at Cootehill, in the County of Cavan. The children of John and Mary Starr were nine in number, as follow: John, born middle of 7mo. 1674; James, born 10mo 28, 1676; married Rachel —, and came to Pennsylvania in 1712, in company with Michael Lightfoot. The Records of Kennett Monthly Meeting furnish the following information, of date 4mo. 7, 1712: "James Starr and Michael Lightfoot produced a certificate from Catherlagh Monthly Meeting, in the kingdom of Ireland, concerning their lives and conversation to the Meeting, which is read, duly considered Marlborough, at Londongrove Meeting, 10mo. 11, 1746, and after his death she married John Jackson, 11mo. 15, 1769; Moses, born 8mo. 27, 1692; married 6mo. (Aug.) 2, 1715 at Oldcastle Meeting, to Deborah King, daughter of Merrick King of that place, and came to Pennsylvania with his brother Jeremiah, bringing a certificate from Oldcastle Meeting, which was presented to Newark (now Kennett) Monthly Meeting, 2mo. 5, 1718; Isaac, born 9mo. 23, 1697; came to Pennsylvania, and afterward married 12mo. 20, 1723, Margaret Lightfoot, daughter of Thomas, of New Garden. The eldest brother, John, also came to Pennsylvania, but, unlike the others, does not appear to have been a Friend. It is said he had numerous descendants, some of whom are in Philadelphia and in Richmond, Indiana.

These brothers settled at first in Londongrove and the vicinity, whence James, Moses and Isaac removed about 1731, the first to the vicinity of Phoenixville, the others to Berks county, but the last finally settled in Goshen, Chester County.

The children of James and Rachel Starr as recorded were:—Mary, born 2mo. 25, 1707; Joseph, born 10mo. 19, 1710; John, born 7mo. 29, 1713; James, born 10mo. 3, 1715; Rachel, born 4mo. 16, 1718; Moses, born 12mo. 21, 1720; Samuel, born 12mo. 19, 1723; Susanna, born 5mo. 14, 1726.

The children of Moses and Deborah Starr were:—Merrick, born 7mo. 17, 1717; John, born 1mo. 16, 1722-3; James, born 12mo. 13, 1724-5; Moses, born 9mo. 25, 1726; Moses, (2d) born 10mo. 6, 1728; Jeremiah, born 2mo. 6, 1731; Deborah, born 2mo. 19, 1733; Abraham, born 2mo. 22, 1735.

The children of Isaac and Margaret Starr were:—Thomas, born 10mo. 25, 1724; John, born 1mo. 6, 1726; Isaac, born 1mo. 7, 1728; William, born 3mo. 27, 1731; Jacob, born 12mo. 1, 1734; Moses, born 1mo. 4, 1737; Mary, born 4mo. 24, 1739; Samuel, born 5mo. 16, 1742; Moses, born 12mo. 1, 1744.

4. THOMAS, born 9mo. 9, 1698; married Mary, daughter of Joseph and Anne Boardman, at Edenderry, King's County, Ireland, 6mo. 9, 1721. Mary died 4mo. 29, 1740, at Jonestown, and was interred at Friends' burying place there. Thomas died 7mo. 21, 1785, at Edenderry, in which place he was buried. They had eight children who (with the exception of one that died young) married and left families, some of whose descendants removed to America.

5. ISAAC, born 7mo. 1, 1701; died 12mo. 15, 1701.

6. ALICE, born 8mo. 29, 1703; married in Ireland, to Joseph Gibson. They came with their family to Pennsylvania, in 1728, and resided in Chester County many years. They had a family of eight or nine children, viz: Anne, Isaac, Thomas, Joseph, Rebecca, John, James, Moses and William. (?)*

It appears from meeting Records that Joseph and his wife produced from Sadsbury to Exeter Meeting a certificate of removal for themselves, received by the latter meeting 9mo. 29, 1739; a certificate thence to New Garden dated 4mo. 30, 1748; thence to Bradford a certificate for themselves and children Joseph, Rebecca, John, James and Moses, received 8mo. 18, 1757. Their son Isaac obtained from New Garden Monthly Meeting a certificate to Bradford, which was received 2mo. 15, 1760. Joseph, the father, died in Nantmeal, in the Spring of 1764. After his death Alice obtained a certificate of removal from Bradford Monthly Meeting, to Fairfax, Va., dated 2mo. 13, 1767, for "herself and daughter Rebecca."—Subsequently, however, the children all settled together on land which their mother had purchased. Alice attained to the age of eighty-four years.

7. WILLIAM, born 2mo. 24, 1705; married 9mo. 9, 1733, to Katharine, daughter of James and Katharine Miller, formerly members of Timahoe Meeting of Friends in Ireland. She was born 1mo. 30, 1713.

Katharine, wife of James Miller, was the daughter of Thomas Lightfoot, a native of Cambridgeshire, England, who at an advanced age removed from Ireland and settled in Chester county, Pa. He died 9mo. 1725, aged about eighty-five years, and was buried at Friends' burying ground, Darby. Concerning him, Thomas Chalkley bore this testimony: "Our dear friend was greatly beloved for his piety and virtue, his sweet disposition and lively ministry."

James and Katharine Miller, accompanied by five of their children, removed to America, arriving at Philadelphia in "the Sizargh of Whitehaven, Jeremiah Cowman, Master," in the 9th or 10th mo., 1729. In a memoir, which has been preserved, it was stated that "Katharine was a worthy public Friend, but in the great loss to her family and friends, she departed this life in said city, a few weeks after their arrival."† Soon after this sad event James and the five children settled in New Garden, and produced at that meeting in the following year their certificate of removal from Dublin, Ireland, dated 5mo. 29, 1729. The names of their children were as follow:—Sarah, Elizabeth, James, Mary, Katharine, Ann and Hannah,—the two oldest daughters, Sarah and Elizabeth, having married in Ireland, the former to Thomas Millhouse, the latter to Thomas Hiatt.

*The last name given in the record kept by John Jackson, son of William, a brother of Alice.

†See Thomas Chalkley's Journal. p. 234. She died 10mo. 17, 1729.

Children of (2) Isaac and Ann (Evans) Jackson.

Thomas Millhouse and family came with his father-in-law to Pennsylvania, and Thomas Hiett and family followed them in 1733, settling in New Garden.

James Miller married (2d) Ruth Seaton, of Londongrove, 2mo. 10, 1734, at Londongrove Meeting, and after his death, she married John Gracy, 3mo. 8, 1751.

James, Jr., born about 1708, married in 1733, Rachel (Fred), widow of James Miller, of Kennett, by whom he had three children. He married (2d) Rebecca Kirk, daughter of Jacob, of Lampeter, 1mo. 6, 1749; was Clerk of New Garden Monthly Meeting for several years, and died 1758.

Mary Miller, daughter of James and Katharine, married 4mo. 11, 1730, Isaac Jackson, son of Thomas, of East Marlborough. They had several children, with whom they removed in 1751 to Eno, North Carolina. Mary was a minister. Ann Miller, the remaining daughter, married 2mo. 19, 1733, William Farquhar, son of Allen, of Pipe Creek, Maryland.

The high standing William and Katharine Jackson maintained, not only in their relations to the religious society of which they were members, but to the community at large wherein they were known, presented an example of industry, frugality and unswerving integrity worthy of imitation. Katharine died 4mo. 2, 1781, aged sixty-seven years. William died 11mo. 24. 1785, aged eighty years. The exemplary lives they lived and their usefulness in society appear manifest from a testimony concerning them, issued by New Garden Monthly Meeting of Friends.

8. MARY, born 2mo. 24, 1705; married Francis Windle 4mo. 14, 1733. They settled in East Marlborough township, and were members of New Garden Monthly Meeting. Mary died 1768. Francis died 9mo. 26, 1788, aged about eighty-seven years. They had a family of six children, viz: Thomas, Ann, William, John, David and Moses, all of whom married excepting John, who died in his twenty-fifth year.

Francis Windle obtained a certificate from New Garden Monthly Meeting, 11mo. 4, 1769, in order for marriage with Mary, widow of Jeremiah Browne, of West Nottingham, but the marriage was prevented by her death on the 19th of the same month.

The records of New Garden Monthly Meeting inform us of the marriage, 6mo. 6, 1728, of John Smith, of Marlborough, to Dorothy Windle, of the same township, probably a sister to Francis. This John Smith, son of Eleazer and Ruth, was born 4mo. 3, 1681, at Dartmouth, N. E., and settled first at Chester, Pa., where he married in 1706, Ann, daughter of Caleb Pusey, a prominent Friend. In 1713 he removed to Marlborough, and a meeting for worship was established at his house early in 1715; which continued till a meeting house was built in Londongrove township, not far distant. He died 10mo. 24, 1766, and was buried at Londongrove. See Collection of Memorials, Philadelphia, 1787. By his wife, Ann, he had a daughter Lydia, born 1mo. 3, 1719-20, who married Thomas Jackson, son of Thomas and Ann, of West Marlborough, and her daughter Mary married William Windle, son of Francis and Mary. After Thomas' death she married a second husband, Isaac Allen.

The children of John and Dorothy Smith were : Anne, born 6mo. 12, 1730; married 3mo. 26, 1748, to William Webster; John, born 9mo. 27, 1732; married 9mo. 15, 1756, to Elizabeth Pusey; Ruth, born 4mo. 6, 1734; married 1mo. 10, 1754, to Samuel Sheward, and (2d) 9mo. 29, 1756, to John Gregg; Thomas, born 11mo. 1, 1737; Sarah, born 9mo. 17, 1741; married 11mo. 16, 1758, to William Webb; Dorothy Smith, widow, married 4mo. 16, 1772, John Gray of Haverford; being his third wife.

9. JAMES, born 2mo. 10. 1708; married 8mo. 31, 1745, to Hannah Miller (a younger sister of William's wife). Their marriage was accomplished at Leacock Meeting, a branch of Sadsbury Monthly Meeting of Friends. James and Hannah both died, without issue, soon after marriage; he died in 8mo. 1748, in New Garden.

10. ISAAC, born 5mo. 13, 1710; died 8mo. 13, 1710.

11. JOHN, born 10mo. 16, 1712; married at New Garden Meeting, 2mo. 17, 1740, to Sarah Miller (a distant relation of William's wife) daughter of James and Rachel of Kennett.

James was a son of Gayen and Margaret Miller of Kennett; born 11mo. 5, 1696; married 4mo. 20, 1721, to Rachel, daughter of John and Katharine Fredd, of Birmingham, Chester County. It appears this John Fredd (a member of the Society of Friends) had resided in the County of Wexford, Ireland; and in the autumn of 1706, William Edmundson, in the course of his religious services, previous to the "National Meeting" at Dublin, when in the eightieth year of his age, "went to John Fredd's and had a large meeting in a barn, it being on First-day of the week." He immigrated with his family to America about the year 1712, and located near the Brandywine, in Birmingham. The following additional information is obtained from the Records of Concord Monthly Meeting, dated 5mo. 13, 1713: "John Fred, late of Ireland, produced a certificate for himself and family from the Monthly Meeting of Carlow bearing date the 25th day of the 12mo., 1712-13, to the satisfaction of this meeting; and Nicholas and Rachel, son and daughter of John Fred, came clear in relation to marriage." Benjamin Fred, an older son, obtained a certificate of removal to New Garden Monthly Meeting, dated 6mo. 1, 1720; he married Deborah, daughter of Simon Hadley, 4mo. 20, 1721. Nicholas Fred married Ann Need, daughter of Joseph and Rebecca Need, of Darby Monthly Meeting, in 1720-21.

James and Rachel Miller had four children, viz: Sarah, born 4mo. 30, 1723; Deborah, born 9mo. 14, 1725; James, born 10mo. 30, 1728; Jesse, born 11mo. 30, 1730. James, the father, died in Kennett, in the 1st or 2mo., 1732, and in the latter part of the next year his widow was married "by a priest" to James Miller, son of James and Katharine, by whom she had three children,—Thomas, born 3mo. 28, 1734; Benjamin, born 6mo. 10, 1736; Katharine, born 1mo. 24, 1738; married David Fream. Rachel died 12mo. 23, 1748-9, and was buried on the 26th, at New Garden.

John and Sarah (Miller) Jackson had eight children, who lived to grow up and marry. His second wife was Margaret (Hayes) Starr, widow of Jeremiah Starr, of Londongrove. They were married 11mo. 15, 1769. John died 5mo. 31, 1791.

12. ISAAC, born 1mo. 13, 1715; he lived to be thirteen or fourteen years of age.

*The record of Andrew Moore's immediate (and also of his somewhat remote) descendants as obtained for this work, is not given in full, the accounts being somewhat conflicting, and there has not been sufficiency of data to remove difficulties in the way of research. It is to be hoped, however, that a future investigator will be able to present the family record in its various ramifications.

Concerning Thomas Whitson, a contemporary* who could speak from personal knowledge of his worth, offers this testimony: That he was most exemplary in the simplicity of his manners and the purity of his life. * * * Alike liberal and practical, his religion permeated all relations of his life, as individual, social, civil; its aim in all to make himself and others better in these various relations; to reform abuses, banish wrongs, abolish evil institutions and immoral practices—to exalt the law of kindness and promote the reign of right, to make men conscious of a bond of brotherhood, connecting man with man and race with race; and thus to aid the whole world's progress toward a purer, nobler life. As neighbor, citizen and member of general society, he aimed to live his principles and make his presence tell for good. Honest and honorable in all his dealings, above even a suspicion of unfairness in design or act; truthful, sincere and plain of speech, he had the confidence of all who knew him.

Daniel Cowman was the son of Matthew and Jane Cowman, of Hubbsgills, which is near Whitehaven, England. Daniel served his apprenticeship in Dublin, where he married Mary, daughter of William and Sarah Brookfield, which Sarah was daughter of Philip Burnyeat, who was brother of John Burnyeat.

John Burnyeat was one of the earliest of the people called Quakers. He was born at Crabtreebeck, in the Parish of Lowswater, Cumberland, of good and respectable parents—became convinced of the Quaker principles in 1653, and belonged to Pardsay Meeting in Cumberland, whence he moved to Ireland, where he married, and settled in Dublin. He traveled and preached the Gospel in Ireland, England, Scotland, Barbadoes and many other parts through North America. He was born in 1631; died 7mo. 11, 1690. She was a minister in the Society of Friends, and the Monthly Meeting in the County of Tipperary, of which she had been a member, gave forth the following testimony:

Respecting the early part of her life, we know not much account, but sufficient to induce us to believe that she was concerned to remember her Creator in the days of her youth. Her removal into this country was about the thirtieth year of her age, to assist a Friend who was religiously concerned to establish a female boarding school, within the compass of this meeting, in which capacity there is good cause to believe she faithfully and conscientiously discharged her duty; and about this time she first came forth in the work of the ministry: her appearances wherein, were sound and edifying. She did not travel much in the work of the ministry, but was at times engaged in visiting the families of Friends, and was concerned diligently to attend both the particular and general meetings to which she belonged, and in them to dig, as the princes formerly, with their staves for the arising of the Well of Life.

In the year 1800, she entered into marriage with our friend, Abraham Jackson, and from about two years after that period to the time of her decease, labored under very trying indisposition of body which prevented her attendance of meetings, yet we trust her life was hid with Christ in God, and that her supplies were drawn from that source, evidenced in being her support and enduing her with patience and resignation under great suffering. She was preserved from murmuring, saying at times, it was right she should be so afflicted, from a sense of her not having fully come up in faithfulness to what was made known in days past to be the Divine will concerning her. Her bodily strength gradually decayed, but her mental faculties remained clear to the last, and it appeared towards the close, as if she had nothing to do but to die. She gently departed this life the 29th of 4th mo., 1812, in the fifty-sixth year of her age, and was interred in Friends' burying-ground, at Ballybrado, on the 6th of 5th mo. Given forth by our Monthly Meeting for County Tipperary, held in Clonmel, the 1st of 10th mo., 1812, and in and on behalf thereof, signed by about fifty men and women Friends.

Abraham Jackson's second wife was Barbara Plaistead, a Welsh woman, of Lanmace, about thirty-six years of age at the time of her marriage—had joined the Society of Friends by conviction and been a member about two years. No issue. A letter from her sister, Hannah S. Jacob, to her cousin, W. J., of Londongrove, Pa., dated Clonmel, 9mo. 18, 1817, gives the following information: "Our dear brother, Abraham Jackson, is taken from us by matrimony, his wife being one of the few Friends that came in by conviction, and has made a little settlement near Cowbridge, in South Wales; they are seventeen miles from meeting, but sit down, eleven in number, two days in the week."

brought with him a certificate* given forth by the Meeting, in the handwriting of William Edmundson, which is as follows:

“At the request of Nicholas Newland we do hereby certify that the said Nicholas Newland acquainted our Men’s Meeting with his intention of removing himself and his family out of this nation into New Jersey or Pennsylvania, in America. And we have nothing to charge against him and his family, or to their conversation in the world, since they frequented our meetings; but hath walked honestly among men for aught we know or can hear of by enquiry which hath been made, but our Friends’ Meeting is generally dissatisfied with his so removing, he being so well settled with his family, and having sufficient substance for food and raiment, which all that profess godliness in Christ Jesus ought to be content with; for we brought nothing into this world and we are sure to take nothing out, and he has given us no satisfactory reason for his removing, but our godly jealousy is, that his chief ground is fearfulness of sufferings here for the testimony of Jesus, or coveting worldly liberty—all which we certify from our Men’s Meeting at Mountmellick, 25th of 12mo., 1682.

“And we further certify that enquiry hath been made concerning the clearness of Nathaniel and John Newland, sons of said Nicholas Newland, from all entanglements of marriage, and that they are released for aught we find.

“Signed by the advice and in the behalf of the meeting, Tobias Bladwell, William Edmundson, Christopher Raper” and others.

Among his favorite scientific pursuits, Botany claimed a large share of his attention; and the late Dr. William Darlington, with whom he was personally acquainted, in his "Memorials of Bartram and Marshall," refers to him thus: "John Jackson, of Londongrove Township, Chester Co., was one of the very few contemporaries of Humphrey Marshall who sympathized cordially with his pursuits. He commenced a garden soon after that at Marshalton was established, and made a valuable collection of rare and ornamental plants, which is still preserved (1849) in good condition by his son William Jackson. 9mo. 29, 1803, at Cornwall, Orange Co., New York. In the autumn of 1785, William went to Redstone to visit his uncle, Samuel Jackson, and remained there four years, engaged in the fulling of cloth and the manufacture of flour—the last two years in partnership with the proprietor of the mills, Rees Cadwallader, a Friend. In 1789, he returned to New Garden, where he remained nearly a year. In 1793, he engaged in the manufacture of flour, with Micajah Crew as partner, at some place about twenty-five miles from Richmond, Va. In 1818 he established in Chester County, the "Kimberton Boarding School for Girls," which for thirty years was conducted, with the assistance of his richly endowed wife and daughters, on advanced and liberal principles, attracting pupils from near and far. He also advanced the social and political interests of the neighborhood and country. His public spirit with enlightened foresight saw the necessity for the "Reading Railroad," and he, in 1831, called the first meeting that opened the subject to the public. He was an earnest advocate for the rights of the slave, who, when fleeing from the South, found in his dwelling shelter and protection. He died 9mo. 1, 1850. Susanna died 7mo. 10, 1854. They had eleven children.

He afterwards removed to Philadelphia with his sister Hannah as a member of his family. Subsequently, his sisters Catharine and Phebe joined him; and after the death of Emmor Kimber, his sister Susanna also went to reside with him. The four sisters all died as members of his family and under his roof, he having survived them all. Samuel and Rebecca lived in the same city at the time of their decease. The average length of the lives of the seven was about eighty years.

They had seven children.

Descendants of (7) William and Katharine (Miller) Jackson.

The ancestors of Evan Lewis emigrated from Wales to Pennsylvania in 1682—Evan Lewis, Henry Lewis, his son, and Henry Lewis, the second son of the first Henry, all coming over in the same ship. Henry Lewis, the first, was foreman of the first grand jury in Chester Co. He died in middle life in 1688. His son Henry, born in 1671; married 10mo. 20, 1692, Mary, daughter of Robert Taylor, of Springfield, Delaware Co. Their third child, John Lewis, was the father of Evan Lewis the second, and was born 3mo. 23, 1697. In 3mo., 1725, he married Catharine Roberts, at Radnor, Delaware Co. They had six children, of whom Evan Lewis (the second) was the youngest son. He was born 4mo. 13, 1740, and was twice married. His second wife, to whom he was married 12mo. 20, 1774, was Jane Meredith, daughter of John Meredith, and Grace, his wife, who was a daughter of Robert Williams, "King of Goshen," (so called because he was the first and for some time the only settler in the township). Jane was born in 1743.

Enoch Lewis, their eldest son, was born 1mo. 29, 1776. His mother and grandmother were both women of uncommon vigor of intellect, and he evinced in early childhood a remarkable aptitude for mathematics and an ardent desire for knowledge. Before he was fifteen, he began to teach; when about nineteen he accompanied Andrew Ellicott and General Irwin, appointed under the authority of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, to lay out several towns, Erie, Meadville, Mercer and others, and assisted as a surveyor in the expedition. On his return in the Fall of 1795, he was appointed mathematical teacher in Friends' Academy, on Fourth Street, near Chestnut, in Philadelphia. He married in 1799, and the same year was invited to take charge of the mathematical department in Friends Boarding School, at Westtown. In 1808 he established a boarding school, at New Garden, where he taught a number of years with reputation and success. In 1827, having become known as a vigorous writer, he was requested to edit a periodical then about being established in Philadelphia in opposition to African slavery, called the African Observer. He continued to conduct that work for one year, when it was discontinued.

He remained in Philadelphia, serving several years as City Surveyor, and in 1831, at the instance of a committee of the Yearly Meeting, returned to Westtown to take charge again of the mathematical department. He remained there until the Spring of 1834, when he moved back to New Garden.

In 1847, a religious periodical called Friends' Review was established by a branch of the Society of Friends, and he was appointed editor. To his duties in that capacity he gave his unremitted attention as long as he lived. His varied and extensive acquirements and accurate scholarship enabled him to impart unusual interest to the work, which, under his management, was placed on a firm footing. He was the author of several mathematical treatises, of a small book on oaths, one on baptism, and also of a life of William Penn, and he contributed largely to some of the periodicals of the day, especially on the subject of slavery. He was a thorough and consistent Friend and filled some of the most important and responsible positions in the Society.

They had eight children, two of whom died in infancy. Lydia died 3mo. 14, 1846. In his later years he lived in Philadelphia, and was designated as "Dr. Jackson of Northumberland," probably to distinguish him from Prof. Samuel Jackson, of the University, as they bore the same name, were nearly the same age, and both eminent in their profession. He died 12mo. 17, 1869. He had five children.

Dr. Samuel Jackson, Professor in the University, was born 3mo. 22, 1787; died 4mo. 4, 1872. He was a son of Dr. David and Susan (Kemper) Jackson, of Philadelphia. Failing eyesight at length forced him to give up teaching, and the last sixteen of his eighty-nine years were passed in total blindness, borne with exemplary patience and cheerfulness. He was an early and earnest Abolitionist, and President of the first Anti-Slavery Society in Windham County, one which was among the earliest-formed associations of the kind in the country. Lydia (Bradford) Burleigh was a native of Canterbury, same State and County, and a lineal descendant of William Bradford, well-known as one of the May-Flower Pilgrims, and as second Governor of Plymouth Colony.

William was elected Governor of the Colony 4mo. 5, 1621, being in his 33d year; and it is recorded he was remarkable for "wisdom, fortitude, piety and benevolence." He had been Governor for ten years, having during that time managed the duties of the office with such executive ability, wisdom and integrity, that his withdrawal therefrom was cause of general regret to the Colony, and was only in consequence of declining health. Near his close, which occurred 5mo. 9, 1657, his last testimony was expressed in these words: "The good spirit of God has given me a pledge of my happiness in another world, and the first-fruits of eternal glory."

for study. Of quick intellect, retentive memory and diligent application, he ranked high as a scholar, though his modest and unassuming manner revealed to comparatively few the extent of his research or the sufficiency of his scholarship." Among the last testimonials to his worth, a contemporary, who knew him well, testified to his intelligence, affability, integrity and Christian character, applying to him the tribute upon Joseph of Arimathea: "He was a good man and a just"—worthy both the love and confidence of those who knew him. In 1851 he entered the University of Pennsylvania and graduated in 1855. In the meantime, however, he spent two years in Europe, studying in Heidelberg, Paris and Vienna. In passing through Basle, Switzerland, in 1854, he was suddenly arrested and incarcerated on suspicion of being the patriot Mazzini, who was at that time an object of vigorous search on account of a recent rising at Milan. The event created considerable excitement at the time, and was the occasion of reclamation and negotiations between the two governments.

Dr. Phillips possessed qualities of a high order, which with the geniality of his nature and comprehensive knowledge acquired through years of assiduous research, won for him the confidence and unfeigned esteem of many friends.*

William Evans was a brother of Ann, wife of Isaac Jackson, and came from Ireland in 1730, bringing a certificate from the Monthly Meeting at Ballycaine, held 1mo. 22, 1730, which was presented to New Garden Monthly Meeting 26th of the 7th mo. following. It is believed that his wife's name was Hannah. They settled on a tract of 1000 acres about five miles from Lancaster, Lancaster Co., Pa. The children, so far as ascertained, were John, the survivor, who died unmarried; (will, dated 7mo. 14, 1782, and proven 1mo. 6, 1783); William, who married Catharine —, and had several children; Hannah, who married James Webb, 10mo. 15, 1742, and died 1762, leaving children; and Isaac. Now these are to certifie whome it may concern that the said Mabel hath been a frequent comer to our meetings of worshipping God, from her childhood, being so educated by her parents, and hath behaved herself soberly and honestly in her conversation as far as ever we could understand, and is loved and esteemed by us, and although being a young woman, is clear of any engagement with any in relation to marriage, and if she be so inclined to alter her condition, that way is left to her liberty, provided it be with her friends' and relations' consent ; so hoping it may be for her wellbeing which is greatly desired, and therefore recommend her to ye Lord's protection and guidance of his spirit, the care of Friends wherever her lot may be to reside, for her preservation in ye truth which is greatly desired by us.

Given at a meeting in Ballyhagan, the 13th day of ye 3mo. 1737, and signed on behalf of ye same by Francis Hobson, Richard Wetherell, Samuel Gray, William Wetherell, Joseph Wetherell, Thomas Toppin,” and several others.

Concerning Moses, a granddaughter† communicates the following information: that he lived in the southern portion of the city, near the Delaware; and a considerable part of his business consisted in making grain chests for merchant vessels. He built the house occupied by Wm. Logan Fisher, on Fisher's Lane—and our informant visiting the latter on a certain occasion, William calling her attention to the solidity of the wood-work, went to the bannister of the ample staircase in the hall and attempted to shake it. “There,” said he, “thou may be

"Halliday Jackson returned the recommendation granted him in 3mo., 1798, endorsed by the Yearly Meeting's committee appointed on Indian Affairs, dated the 14th of last month, expressive of their unity with him in his weighty undertaking, and satisfaction with his service among the Indian tribes where he was stationed, which, with his safe return and verbal account of pursuing his prospect to the peace of his own mind, is satisfactory to this meeting."

He obtained a certificate of removal from New Garden Monthly Meeting, dated 4mo. 28, 1803, to the meeting at Darby, Delaware Co., Pa., within the limits of which he then settled. In 1830, the results of his own observations

For, although deprived of the social comforts of society, and far removed from all the near and tender connections of his youthful days, yet from a full conviction of the rectitude of the work, and the incalculable good, under the Divine blessing, that might finally result to that people, the wilderness was often made as it were an Eden, and the desert as the garden of the Lord—'Joy and gladness were found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody.'" John Jackson was an approved minister in the Society of Friends, and as such, stood pre-eminent in his day as an eloquent and impressive speaker, and for his well-adapted language, and the clear enunciation of his religious principles. In 1837 he and his wife (whose education and taste favored his literary pursuits) founded the Sharon Female Boarding School at their residence near Darby, which proved a highly successful institution, and was maintained as such until the close of his life.

In 1840 he engaged in religious service on a visit* to the West India Islands, which, after an absence of several months, was accomplished with "great comfort and peace of mind." As an Astronomer he ranked high among the scientific minds of the country. His large Fraunhofer Equatorial Telescope and its valuable auxiliaries attested his liberality and earnestness in the promotion of astronomical science; and through their agency, as a contemporary has observed, he was enabled "to present to the minds of the children under his care, the grandeur and glory of the Divine Architect of the Universe." In other departments of science his knowledge was extensive, and co-equal therewith he possessed the happy faculty of imparting, instructingly, and in a lucid manner that knowledge to others. Having become a member of the Delaware Co. Institute of Science, in 1834, by his aid its interests were materially advanced. His library, cabinets of minerals and fossils, with other appliances for scientific instruction, were extensive, and open to all who might incline to their investigation. The study of the Natural Sciences, rightly pursued, he regarded as ennobling and elevating in its tendency; and his high appreciation of such pursuits is expressed in his own words as follows: "Every page of the great volume of nature is full of living and instructive truth. There is a beautiful relation between mind and matter, between the works of God and our capacity to contemplate them. Our intellectual nature is as much a gift of God, as the gift of grace, and we are responsible for the culture and improvement of the one, as of the other. I have no idea that so noble a talent is to be buried in the earth, that it is to be employed merely in procuring food and raiment for these frail temples, which are soon to moulder in the dust. Far otherwise! Placed in the midst of a beautiful creation, we are invited to meditate on the workmanship of its Author. Such an exercise of the intellect is profitable to us for it leads to humility, and while it makes manifest the feebleness of man and our comparative nothingness, amidst the immensity of creation, it exalts our views of the wisdom, goodness and power of the Creator."

He visited his Astronomical Observatory, for the last time, about six weeks before his death, to record some important observations for the Smithsonian Institute at Washington; his services in this way having been continued for years, and fully acknowledged in a fitting manner as an aid to the Coast Survey Department of the Government.

As an earnest advocate of the principles of peace, his views upon this subject resulted in the publication of a work on "Peace and War;" and later in life his "Dissertation on the Christian Ministry." He died 4mo. 14, 1855.

The Tysons were of German descent, and Reiner Tysen, the grandfather of Elisha, immigrated with several other Friends, from Germany in 1683, and settled at Germantown.* Elisha married Mary, daughter of William Amos,

*The tract on which Germantown now stands was purchased by Pastorius under the grant of William Penn, containing 200 acres. On this tract the immigrants from Germany settled, hence originated the name Germantown. There is a singular paper extant, deemed of sufficient interest to be noted here, as follows:

"We whose names are to these presents subscribed, do hereby certify unto all whom it may concern, that soon after our arrival in this province of Pennsylvania, in October, 1683, to our certain knowledge, Herman op den Graff, Dirk op den Graff, and Abraham op den Graff, as well as we ourselves, in the cave of Francis Daniel Pastorius, at Philadelphia, did cast lots for the respective lots which they and we then began to settle in Germantown; and the said Graffs (three brothers) have sold their several lots, each by himself, this 29 November, A. D. 1709. Lenart Arets, Jan Lenson, Thomas Huudus, William Streygort, Abraham Tunes, Jan Lucken, Reiner Tysen." Elisha was a distinguished philanthropist, and his efforts on behalf of the colored race were, through long years, by an unyielding courage and determination of purpose, exerted successfully in rescuing many of them from bondage, often at the risk of his own life. He died 2mo. 16, 1824, aged 75 years; and as evidence of the appreciation of his philanthropic labors, it is said more than ten thousand colored people attended his funeral.

One of the settlers of Dorchester, was Roger Clap from England, born April 6, 1609. During the scarcity of provision at that time they were supplied with corn by the Indians, who rendered them great assistance. It is said, "The people were glad to procure clams, and mussels, and fish, and often they had nothing but samp and hominy."†

Roger Clap held important trusts of honor which he discharged, with fidelity, and "was remarkably pious, very meek and humble, and of a quiet and peaceable spirit, and there was a dignity in his deportment which commanded respect." He died February 2, 1691. He had three sons named, Preserved, Hopestill and Desire, and a daughter named Wait. 2430. WILLIAM LOYD, born 5mo. 28, 1828; died 3mo. 25, 1861. William L. Baily at a very early age, manifested a decided taste for mechanical pursuits. But as his brothers were engaged in mercantile business he followed in their track, but not to the exclusion of his favorite occupation. Machinery was his delight; and his time was frequently spent with chisel and plane when others would prefer some lighter amusement. Many a little article, such as work-boxes, writing desks, etc., elaborately gotten up, attested his handy-work; and one or two steam engines, perfect in all their parts, showed the versatility of his mind. A few years before his death, a love of nature drew him into close observation of the feathered tribes; and he turned his attention to the study of Ornithology. Being quick and accurate with his pencil, he loved to portray their beauties on paper, and soon became a proficient—particularly for humming-birds; and to him in a great degree is due the process of presenting this joyous bird on paper with its peculiar hues. As a taxidermist he had few amateur superiors, as many of his prepared specimens still show. He published a work on Ornithology, entitled "Our Own Birds."

He did not give up mechanical pursuits till declining health rendered it necessary; and, at the time of his death, an unfinished power-loom, for weaving tapestry goods, told of many weary days spent in its invention, for some one else to carry out his idea, which it is believed was done and is now in practical use. He had a clear mind—and as a crowning tribute to his memory, it may be said, he lived and died a Christian though his years were few. Loving and gentle in his disposition, it may be said of him

"None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise."

Dell Noblitt was a descendant of a Huguenot family, whose ancestors, to escape the persecutions under Charles IX against those in France who had embraced the Protestant faith, fled to the north of Ireland for refuge, in 1572, the time of the St. Bartholomew massacre. The early settlement of the Swedes along the Delaware offering favorable privileges for emigrants from the old world, the paternal ancestor of Dell Noblitt came hither and located in the vicinity of Darby, Delaware Co. A leading Wilmington paper gives the following biographical sketch: "In his youth he learned the trade of cabinet-making with Philip Painter, in the borough of Chester, and subsequently worked at it in the City of New York; was there during a visitation of yellow fever, 1795. Three years later he had removed to Germantown, Pa., and while there he cast his first vote for Thomas Jefferson for President. In 1810 he removed to Wilmington. Mr. Noblitt in 1801, in the twenty-fourth year of his age, was married to Elizabeth Wiall, of Philadelphia, by whom he had three children—Stephen, Hamilton and Margaret, all now dead. After ten years of wedded life his wife died, and, after remaining a widower over a year, he married Elizabeth Bratton, of Brandywine Hundred. By this union he had thirteen children, only six of whom are now living—three sons and three daughters. In the years of his more active life (he) was one of the Wardens of St. Andrew's P. E. Church, of Wilmington, where for a long time he was a communicant, and regularly every Sunday, until last year, was to be found among the congregation." Dell Noblitt had an older brother, John, who lived on a part of the tract originally owned by the Swedes, until the time of his death, which occurred in 1855, he having attained to the age of 94 years.

Many of the Jacksons in England became identified with Friends at an early period, and shared largely in the sufferings to which that People were subjected, evidencing by their steadfastness in supporting their principles, that they were not only "zealous of good works," but in times of the bitterest persecution, manifested the Christian spirit of forgiveness, and "held fast to their faith without wavering." A recital of some of their trials, extracted from Besse's "Sufferings of the People called Quakers," is here given :

an Inn (where they were giving thanks before supper, which was called preaching at a conventicle) and committed to prison. After some time of confinement they were sent for to a Justice at an Inn, who, for their refusing to swear, sent them to prison as under a sentence of Premunire, and there they lay above ten years, though never legally tried or convicted."

1662. Wales. On the 26th of 2mo., THOMAS JACKSON with others, was sent to prison for attending meeting.

On the 13th of 12mo., at London, the same year, MARGARET JACKSON with fifteen others received the sentence of transportation to Barbadoes.

Wales. This year THOMAS JACKSON had goods taken from him for absence from the National worship. In Durham "GEORGE JACKSON was committed to prison twenty days." This year WILLIAM JACKSON and others were imprisoned in Warwickshire and most of them excommunicated.
